"Before that we find the entity was in the Atlantean land when there were the preparations of those things that had pertained to the ability for the application of appliances to the various elements known as electrical forces in the present day; as to the manners and ways in which the various crafts carried individuals from place to place, and what may be known in the present as the photographing from a distance, or the fields of activity that showed the ability for reading inscriptions through walls - even at distances, or for the preparations of the elevations in the various activities where there was the overcoming of (termed today) the forces of nature or gravity itself; and the preparations through the crystal, the mighty, the TERRIBLE CRYSTAL that made for the active principles in these, were a portion of the activity of the entity in that experience." The image is a digital representation of a map with a focus on a specific area. The map is divided into two main sections, with the upper section showing a lighter color, likely indicating a lighter terrain, and the lower section showing a darker color, likely indicating a darker terrain. The lighter section appears to be a flat area with no visible landforms, while the darker section shows a variety of landforms, including mountains, valleys, and other geographical features.

In the lower section of the map, there is a prominent blue area that stands out against the darker colors. This blue area is surrounded by a lighter color, which suggests that it is a significant feature or landmark within the map. The blue area is bordered by a darker line, which could indicate a boundary or a specific area of interest.

The map is set against a background that appears to be a gradient of colors, transitioning from a lighter shade at the top to a darker shade at the bottom. This gradient effect gives the map a three-dimensional appearance, as if the map is floating in space.

There are no texts or labels present in the image, and the style of the image is consistent with a digital representation of a map, likely used for educational or informational purposes. The image does not contain any other discernible details or objects.

The image is a painting depicting a dramatic scene of a stormy sea with waves crashing against a rocky shoreline. In the foreground, there is a large, partially submerged structure that resembles a temple or fortification, with a prominent clock tower. The structure is partially submerged in the water, and the waves are crashing against it, creating a sense of turmoil.

In the background, there is a large, dark, stormy sky with lightning bolts, suggesting a violent storm. The colors in the painting are predominantly dark, with the stormy sky and the rocky shoreline in shades of dark blue and gray, and the temple or fortification in a lighter, more golden hue. The overall mood of the painting is intense and dramatic, capturing the chaos and power of nature. There are no texts or discernible human figures in the image.

Looks good to me, figure Atlantis was in the Atlantic as described by Plato ie. beyond the "Pillars of Hercules" and in front of an "opposite continent" which could be reached by voyagers via a series of islands. Other Atlantean locations disregard the only existent description of such, which is contradictory and defies logic. Not to deny there is many other sunken lands, that's geological fact.

The profusion of ambiguousness on the topic reeks of the jew and secret societies meddling, which lends credence to the original tale. Attempts to negate, deflect and capture the myth for themselves. Minoan Thera, a Phoenician colony (Moloch/Saturn) at the time of the eruption, is being promoted as Atlantis on the The Pendragon Cycle (tv series on now), it's also on top of the Wiki location entries, but below outright denial and claims of metaphor. Literally in the Mediterranean, nowhere near the description, but close to the heart of old world corruption.

The image is a portrait painting of a man, likely from the 17th century, judging by the style of clothing and the style of the hat. The man is depicted in profile, wearing a black hat with a wide brim, a white ruff collar, and a black coat with a high collar. His attire is complemented by a white, ruffled cravat. The background is a deep red, which contrasts with the man's dark clothing, making him the focal point of the painting.

The painting is signed "Francis Baron Lord Loringham" in the upper left corner, indicating the artist's name and possibly the subject's title or rank. The text "Loringham 1671" is also present, suggesting the year of the painting. The style of the painting is realistic, with meticulous attention to detail in the clothing and the background, and a focus on the subject's features and expression. The painting is executed in oil on canvas, a medium known for its ability to capture the nuances of light and color.

Found towards sunset, ever westward, New Atlantis, mythical home of Kal-El the superjew as told by Francis Bacon. Considered an almost saintly founding founder of both science and America, he was such a renowned predator there was children's nursery rhyme about avoiding him. A filthy pedo like most "elite" secret society members.

>A reputed pederast accused of 'buggery' (which he denied), as well a habit his brother, educated by the same cleric, was also reputed to be fond, prosecutions for this in the upper class seemed rare; as King James was apparently of identical persuasion. Bacon went on to write of an utopia where no scent of 'masculine love' was to be found; and as if to convince, he married a 14 years old girl at age 48. Her subsequent preference for other men points to a rather starved appetite, which can come as no surprise. And it is of this rancid bacon, folks, inspiration for the modern 'empirical method' comes to us behaving as an intolerant religion; replete with 'scientific' dogma and its narrow rut of inquiry.

Joabin's statement, therefore, provides a further link of the Bensalemites to a biblical benediction (Abraham is described elsewhere in "New Atlantis" as "Father of the faithful"). The reference to Moses includes the statement that he "by a secret cabala ordained the laws of Bensalem which they now use.""

"It seemed to us that we had before us a picture of our salvation in heaven, for we that were awhile since in the jaws of death were now brought into a place where we found nothing but consolations." The men thought "we were come into a land of angels." The city residents seemed both benevolent and superhuman to them, and they found themselves (it is implied) happily in the status of children under the welcome authority of wise, even godlike fathers. That is, instead of the usual adventurers' tale of civilized men encountering savages, the narrative begins to look like the reversal of such, an instance of primitive Europeans 'discovering' a superior people."

>In effect, New Atlantis would have become our nightmare. Bacon's political and cultural project of world domination would have become both toxic for the population of his island and subversive for the distant kingdoms plundered by the happy sect, which would have controlled Salomon's house

The other tradition of Atlantis...

Theopompus was an ancient Greek historian and rhetorician, a contemporary of Alexander the Great. His works were unfortunately lost, but fragments of his work Philippica survived in quotations and excerpts. Thanks to this, we have access to the story of Meropis, an ancient lost continent that seems in many ways to be a parallel to Atlantis. Academics treat this text as a parody of Plato, but neither the compiler nor the original text suggests it is a parody or allegory. Here is a summary of the myth of Meropis:

>silenus describes a continent beyond the ocean, Meropis, much larger than Asia.

>two main cities: Eusebes ("Pious") and Machimos ("Warlike").

>peoples with very long lifespans, abundant metals.

>they tried to invade "our" world but gave up, considering it miserable.

There are more elements than in Plato's story, and elements that align with traditions and investigations concerning the Ario-Atlantic current that germinated among the Scythians and Germans/Celts.

Aelian, who is the source for the Philippica, does not present it as a parody. He introduces it as "things that Theopompus tells" and places it alongside other accounts that he treats seriously. Atlantis is a myth of fall, and Meropis is a myth of separation, together, they form the complete piece...

>in the figure of Silenus mounted on the donkey, a teaching of a properly metaphysical order is condensed, that the principle that preserves the memory of the center is sustained by the very domain of the periphery. The old satyr, which is bearer of a bitter wisdom, does not express a psychological pessimism, but the obscure recollection of a state prior to formal coagulation; his saying "the best of all is not to be born, and the second best, once born, is to die as quickly as possible." translates the nostalgia for the unmanifest. The donkey, a beast of burden and of earthly obstinacy, represents the fixation of substance in density, the heavy support of conditioned existence. That intelligence is seated upon this base indicates not moral superiority, but an ontological situation: the spirit, upon entering the cycle, is obliged to ride that which limits it. And yet, in the procession of Dionysus, this very condition can become a path of reversal, for the Dionysian ecstasy does not suppress form, but momentarily transfigures it, opening within the thickness of the world a fissure through which the remembrance of the Principle can still flash forth

It always comes back to the DG, kek...

BOOK III, CHAP. XVIII.

>Theopompus relates a discourse between Midas the Phrygian and Silenus. This Silenus was son of a Nymph, inferiour by nature to the Gods onely, superior to Men and Death. Amongst other things, Silenus told Midas that Europe, Asia and Africk were Islands surrounded by the Ocean : That there was but one Continent onely, which was beyond this world, and that as to magnitude it was infinite : That in it were bred, besides other very great Creatures, Men twice as big as those here, and they lived double our age : That many great Cities are there, and peculiar manners of life ; and that they have Laws wholly different from those amongst us : That there are two Cities farre greater then the rest, nothing to like each other ; one named Machimus, Warlike, the other Eusebes, Pious : That the Pious people live in peace, abounding in wealth, & reap the fruits of the Earth without Ploughs or Oxen, having no need of tillage or sowing. They live, as he said, free from sickness, and die laughing, and with great pleasure : They are so exactly Just, that the Gods many times vouchsafe to converse with them. The Inhabitants of the City Machimus are very Warlike, continually armed and fighting : They subdue their Neighbours, and this one City predominates over many. The Inhabitants are not fewer then two hundred Myriads : they die sometimes of sickness, but this happens very rarely, for most commonly they are kill'd in the Wars by Stones or Wood, for they are invulnerable by Steel.

>They have vast plenty of Gold and Silver, insomuch that Gold is of less value with them then Iron with us. He said that they once designed a Voiage to these our Islands, and sailed upon the Ocean, being in number a thousand Myriads of men, till they came to the Hyperboreans ; but understanding that they were the happiest men amongst us, they contemned us as persons that led a mean inglorious life, and therefore thought it not worth their going farther. He added what is yet more wonderful, that there are men living amongst them called Meropes, who inhabit many great Cities ; and that at the farthest end of their Countrey there is a place named Anostus, (from whence there is no return) which resembles a Gulf ; it is neither very light nor very dark, the air being dusky intermingled with a kinde of Red : That there are two Rivers in this place, one of Pleasure, the other of Grief ; and that along each River grow Trees of the bigness of a Plane-tree. Those which grow up by the River of Grief bear fruit of this nature ; If any one eat of them, he shall spend all the rest of his life in tears and grief, and so die. The other Trees which grow by the River of Pleasure produce fruit of a contrary nature, for who tastes thereof shall be eased from all his former desires : If he loved any thing, he shall quite forget it ; and in a short time shall become younger, and live over again his former years : he shall cast off old age, and return to the prime of his strength, becoming first a young man, then a child, lastly, an infant, and so die. This, if any man think the Chian worthy credit, he may believe. To me he appears an egregious Romancer as well in this as other things.

>Although Naram-Sin, like Sargon before him, was closely associated with the mace, ceremonially presented to him by his ancestor god, Ilaba, he also used weapons made for him by the smiths of the Nergal cult. As Nergal, lord of the netherworld, was identified with the fire god, Erra, we can assume that the weapons these smiths made were forged and fashioned from metal.

>In one composition, called Erra and Naram-Sin, a particularly powerful weapon made for him by these smiths is mentioned: "Erra [Nergal], beloved of Duranki, monarch of Meslam, foremost of the Igigi, give the king the mighty weapon, the scimitar." In the same composition, we also read that "men of Erra" followed him as warriors on his right-hand side.

>Of special interest is a remark made by Naram-Sin in an inscription, preserved on an Old Babylonian tablet copy from Ur. He says that he conquered the Amanus region in the distant west with the weapons of Nergal and Dagan.

Although these "weapons" might refer to real weapons used by the hero, we can also understand this in a wider sense as referring to two groups of warriors, namely the "men of Erra", who belonged to the Nergal-Erra cult, and other warriors, who belonged to the cult of Dagan.

>What is striking about Nergal and Dagan is that they belonged to the netherworld and the sky or heavenly realm, respectively. They represented the opposite poles of the cosmos! Warriors associated with these gods would have marched under the symbols associated with these cosmic regions, namely the mushussu snake and Anzu or lion-dragon. As lord of the netherworld, Nergal's symbol was the mushussu snake and in Naram-Sin's time, two snakes guarded the entrance to this god's sanctuary at Kutha.

We've run into these Nergal black stone cultists twice in previous threads, Cuthite serpent tribe, tracked them from Egypt and Syria right through to Hellenic and Roman times. Became the Arcadian Dionysian Artificers who went to Byblos, rebranded as Gibilites, then got hired by some faggot in Jerusalem to build a temple.

Gibil/Gabal is synonymous with Erra/ Negral.

>There's something strange about them; the priests of Emesa in Syria, seem to be at the center of many of the religious cults that exist today. Their worship of the black stone as El-Gabal/Elegabalus (associated by the Romans with Helios, Aion, Cronus-Heracles/Phanes, Sol Invictus, and Mithras), references to Julia Domna as the virgin mother Vesta, Elagabalus (the tranny emperor) not eating pigs and being circumcised, Severus Alexander wanting to build a temple to Jesus in Rome and open a synagogue in Rome, etc.

>The book of Kings states the Temple of Solomon was built by special masons from Gebal called the Gebalites or Gibilites, whose identity undergo various transformations through the various translations of the reference to them. But that they were masons and from Gebal is clear

>Since the Freemasons fashion themselves as builders of Solomon's temple, the capital G between their compass and square is no doubt a reference to Gebal, where the Crusaders would build the Castle of Gibelet, making Gibil the true god of their worship, the god of Gilgamesh, even if they themselves do not know this than others. The paint is uneven, with some areas appearing more worn and chipped than others.

The wall features a series of inscriptions or markings in a script that is not clearly legible due to the resolution and angle of the photograph. The text appears to be in a language that is not Latin or Greek, as the characters are not recognizable. The style of the writing is cursive, with some letters appearing to be more stylized than others.

The image is taken from a perspective that is slightly angled, with the top left corner appearing to be at a slight angle compared to the rest of the wall. The background of the image is not visible, focusing the viewer's attention solely on the wall and the inscriptions. The overall impression is that of a historical or ancient artifact, possibly from a time when writing was not yet common.

In terms of the bigger narrative after the flood, Aryan Scythian naga tribes went north from the Armenian highlands into the Black Sea region. The others (two tribes) went south into Iraq and established the city of Uruk, these two tribes conflating the lie that is solar and lunar demiurgic archetypes, or brother dawn and brother dusk, the twins.

While most nephilim, including the Aryan branch are described as pale and redheaded, I'll use clown to refer only the cabal cultists who went south, creators of clownworld. The other side of the same shekel was the dwarf jew pheno, pale maggot with white hair and red eyes, the lunar subterranean archetype associated with Cain/Negral. Depicted in media as white haired dark elves and morlocks, also in the rigged GOT where the two branches fight, war of the Roses.

>In Hebrew, the word for Nod, נֹד, originates in and shares root meanings of wander, indicative of Cain's punishment to wander the earth. By the 15th Century, Cain was established in folk custom as being considered trapped in the moon and, therefore, forced to wander, ... "ever desiring the earth" (Cochrane, 2002).

Tunnels of Set

Everyone has heard the rumours, kids being taken down into the tunnels, sacrificed... eaten. Whether its missing 411, the jerky room under the temple at Epstein Island, alien hybrids in Dulce Nightmare Halls, or the slave pens where humans are bred like cattle then transported worldwide for dark and nefarious purpose, these "urban myths" share the common denominator of being the same stories that have been told for millennia... humans are being predated upon by underworld reptilians.

>This level is allegedly dedicated to genetic experimentation and hybridization programs. According to reports from supposed insiders, the hall is lined with glass vats and suspension tanks containing grotesque lifeforms — hybrid creatures combining human DNA with alien, animal, or synthetic material. There are whispered descriptions of:

>Human-like beings with reptilian eyes and gills

>Embryonic entities with distorted limbs and telepathic pulses

>Creatures that "shouldn't be alive," kept in stasis, observation, or pain

>The Morlocks and Eloi are two fictional species from H.G. Wells' novel "The Time Machine." The Eloi are depicted as a fragile, surface-dwelling race that lives in ease, while the Morlocks are their underground counterparts, who maintain machinery and eventually prey on the Eloi for food

Ever heard the vault doors open on mechanical gears, the excruciating screams and pleas for mercy, of the lost being cut up slowly as their tormentors mock, and curse, laughing? While powerless to help, locked in a cage. Truth is stranger than fiction.

It's this simple, regardless of all consequence but one: becoming the same as them, these demons must go.

Writings of Nicholas de Vere are worth a look, assume he had some sources not available to the public. Still just a disgruntled right hand path elite, the tinker usurpers his cousins. Easily identified by his support of Jewish miscegenation, whom he considered an equivalent royal dragon line because of this. Infers ancestors amongst the Sumerian component we've identified as lizardniggers. Fast forward to today and there is little difference between a Windsor and a Rothschild, but a big difference between us and them.

>Far from being the characters of fable, de Vere explains, the Elven race, including Fairies, Dragons, Witches, Picts (Pixies) and Vampires, were very real beings whose blood rituals sustained their superconsciousness and transcendent vision, and maintained their positions as overlords of mankind.

>The Scythians originated in the Balkans, Transylvania, Carpathia and Ukraine. In general, the Scythians ("people of the powers") were tall, pale-skinned, with golden red hair (the red heads) and green eyes

>Scythian Danaan who migrated to Eire (Ireland) and the rest of Europe were a "race apart." They were a ruling caste. They are the Merovingians. The Celtic lineage were stocky, squat with dark hair.

>The Royal Dragon family of the Jews- the House of David

>The aristocratic families believe their pure blood makes them the "genetically engineered" and chosen rulers of Man

>Vampires were individuals and families who used the practice of drinking blood to achieve specific aims and fulfill social obligations of their rank and position. In fact the etymology of the word Vampire is "Overlord." The author warns against Poseur Vampirism. If one inflicts fear in the victim before obtaining blood, the blood will contain ingredients not worth imbibing. It must be freely given.

>The Vedic religion, claims de Vere, stemmed from this contact with the Elven gods and goddesses who migrated after the flood from the Balkans and Transylvania to Sumeria. He claims, the Tantra and the Qabalah are descended from ancient Ubaid Druidic philosophy, and Sumeria is not the cradle of civilization, but is perhaps the high chair. The first Sumerians, he writes, were Ubaid Overlords from Central Eurasia.

>In practical terms the concept of this unique fraternity can be traced back to the original Grand Assembly of the Annunaki in ancient Mesopotamia".

Rather than these inbred degenerate weaklings, the divine heritage of the dragon legacy is ours, as the bloodline has been spread far and wide in the Aryan race. Seeded by those who went north to the steppes, their vigour driving them East and West, not even the oceans a barrier. It waits, potential dormant in most, some stirring restlessly, beginning to awaken. The elites sold us out long ago, their story has been one of degeneration, the bright lights amongst them flickering and dying out, we will rise and burn, this is the age of man.

I agree, despite certain interesting ideas, it is notoriously a poisoning of the well in a hermetic style, precisely to drive us further from the truth. For example, we should not operate from a Jewish perspective; we must invert their myths, for the truth lies there they are the ones who subverted and inverted things in the first place. The Nephilim are the Aryans, the bene-elohim are the elektrozoa, they are the Atlanteans. The Watchers are the wise Apkallu. Babel is beautiful and moral; Nimrod is an exemplary King-Magus. Edom (red) represents our strength. Everything must be inverted to take advantage of these satanic texts.

Fair enough, can see how the posts can be construed as supporting vamparism. Intended it as evidence, a clear admission they were blood drinkers, and folks would just know that was wrong (in hindsight people may think vampire lite version cool). Don't think the elves/ancestor gods were vampires. Likely some of the nephilim (not all) were blood drinkers, probably the Amelekites/Anakim and Rephahim, which are the ones both jews and elites descend from.

The serpent/giant designators for nephilim seem to be widespread and historically correct, related to appearance rather than actions in most cases. We see it in various forms from Europe to Asia (dragons, naga etc) and even Mesoamerican mythology as Quetzalcoatl the Feathered Serpent. It is likely the ancestor gods looked similar and was source of this physiognomy, a theory supported by watcher sightings (but not confirmed because they are jewish).

The seed itself, most obviously appearing as RH-, is ultimately from the ancestral gods, which I have no problem referring to as elven blood so as to shift the symbolism to the positive. Have been mostly referring to the ancestors as little g gods and elves to differentiate them from nephilim/serpents anyway, and "serpent seed" does send the mind to them, the fallen version.

>Reverse everything and you'll arrive at the answer.

It's an idea I've had before but disregarded as too simplified, if this was the case we could just cut off, rather than disentangle the myths. The way the deception is perpetrated is a series of reflections, mimicking the way energy steps down, the general narrative is opposite yes. Then certain aspects are reflected again, while others are not. Repeated ad nauseum to make a hall of mirrors.

>The Watchers are the wise Apkallu

As an example take the watchers, generally described as evil fallen angels by abrahamics, they were actually the Seven semidivine sages of Aryan myth. So watchers good.

>Good watchers in the Bible refer to a class of angelic beings mentioned primarily in the Book of Daniel, where they are described as holy angels sent by God to observe and deliver messages. They are depicted as being awake and vigilant, serving a divine purpose, particularly in the context of Nebuchadnezzar's dream in Daniel 4.

It's fallacy to think the Demiurge has no minions. The war in heaven is described in all the myths and literature, worldwide. Valinor/Hyperborea would never have fallen without stronger (at the time) opposition.

Literally is an argument you piece of shit shill, you're just deflecting. Its all been posted already but I'll lay some of it out for you again because you're so useless, if you want any more read the thread.

Book describes Scythian tribes as Naga (serpent people) from research into Vedic texts and ancient European historians (picrel). Long before Robert Sepehr, it was written in 1829.

"Naga and Takshac are Sanscrit names for a snake or serpent, the emblem of Buddha or Mercury. The Naga race, so well known to India, the Takshacs or Takiuks of Scythia, invaded India about six centuries before Christ"

>The Scythian origin myth describes the ancestry of the Scythians, tracing their lineage to the god Targītavah and the Snake-Legged Goddess, who is depicted as a primordial figure with both human and serpent traits. This myth was significant in Scythian culture and was recorded in various forms by ancient authors like Herodotus.

>When the sons of Heracles and the viper-maiden grew to adulthood, it was time for them to undergo their test. Of the three, only the youngest, Scythes, was able to successfully wear the belt of Heracles and draw back the powerful bow. Agathyrus and Gelonus, after failing the test, were banished from their homeland, but Scythes, the lone victor, went on to father the ruling class of the Scythians.

Here we don't do a one-sided reading; we absorb various sources and reject a good part of the conclusions, as they are corrupted by the Typhonian stain of YHWH... The history and chronology as you know it is literally a farce; you fell for a propaganda of barbarians vs. civilized people, when it was precisely the OPPOSITE! The religion of the Germanic peoples is precisely monotheistic and in fact closer to the Atlantean solar path that Christianity re-atomized in Europe; this is why it resonated so much with Europeans, it was a reactivation of superior currents with this Nicene-Abrahamic veneer.

The Jewish myth is simply 90% inverted; if you follow all the enemies of the Hebrews, you'll be on the right side. The Aryans are the Nephilim, the Watchers are good. Babel is the right side, Nimrod is a hero, Cain was wronged, King Og was a noble warrior, Goliath was a great soldier, Esau was wronged, and Edom is literally Europe.

The serpent (which was actually an eagle/falcon (the true Aryan symbol)) did save man in the prison of Eden and on the Cross. Christ is the Serpent, Christ is Prometheus, Christ is Lucifer, the green Promethean Luciferian light is the Christic light, the same green ray of the black sun.

>The Amerique Septentrionale map, printed almost one hundred years before the discovery of San Francisco Bay in 1769, contradicts the story that San Francisco was named after the nearby Mission San Francisco de Asís, itself founded 107 years after the map was printed.

>The map contains the label S. Francisco along the California coast, in a bay. How could this be possible? There is not a direct or known link between "S. Francisco" and any pre-Columbian Native American cultures or traditions (at least none that we have uncovered in our extensive research). Pre-Columbian societies had their own names and identifiers for their territories, which were different from the names the Spanish and other European colonizers later introduced.

"The 1669 map suggests the current historical naming narrative is suspect."

>S. Francisco, as a place located in California, was apparently known over a century before its discovery by Juan Manuel de Ayala (et al.). The name San Francisco could not have been based on a Spanish 1776 monastery dedicated to St. Francis of Assisi.

"It is impossible, even though that is the official history we have."

We have the name on a map from 1669. The Monastery's founders were not yet born. The men who found the bay were not yet born. We are told the bay had been missed on every prior exploration and mapping exercise until Juan Manuel de Ayala discovered it in 1769.

>To solve this 100-year discrepancy, the best interpretation, to our thinking, is that the history might be the other way around; the name San Francisco might have been taken from whatever was presented near current-day San Francisco back in the 16th century and then adopted by the new people moving into the region.

>If this map is some one-off anomaly, it is not quite as strong a case as we claim. It begs the question, are there earlier maps with this reference? Even better, how about an earlier map that uses the full name of San Francisco on the California shores instead of S. Francisco?

>Urbano Monte's 1587 map is more than a cartographic achievement: it is a window into the Renaissance's worldview. Hailing from Milan, Monte was a man of vision and detail, and his map captures this essence (Van Duzer, 2018). Comprising a vast 60 sheets, when assembled, it stands as one of the most extensive known world maps from the period. One of the map's distinct features is its polar projection, a unique advanced approach for the period. In constructing this map, Monte meticulously incorporated both documented and geographical knowledge.

The image is a close-up of a historical map, likely from the 16th century, depicting a region in the Iberian Peninsula. The map is drawn in a style reminiscent of the Renaissance, with a focus on topography and the layout of cities. The map is divided into four quadrants, each representing a different city or region.

In the top left quadrant, the name "Rio Alboréia" is written, indicating a river or a significant waterway. The top right quadrant shows "Alboréda," which is likely the name of the city or region. The bottom left quadrant is labeled "Carrarain," and the bottom right quadrant is labeled "Ancon de Arés," which suggests the names of two cities or regions.

The map is drawn with a variety of colors, including red, blue, and green, which are used to represent different types of landforms and possibly different types of terrain or water bodies. The style of the map is detailed, with lines and shading that indicate the elevation of the land and the depth of the water.

At the bottom of the image, there is text that reads "Urbano Monte's 1587 Map Showing Cities," which suggests that the map is a historical representation of the cities of the time, likely from the 1580s, as indicated by the year "1587" on the bottom right corner of the image. The text is in a smaller font size compared to the map, and it is in a different color, making it less prominent.

The image is a historical artifact, likely from a historical atlas or map collection, and it provides a glimpse into the geography and urban development of the Iberian Peninsula during the 16th century.

>Together, these maps prompt a profound reevaluation, suggesting that the name "San Francisco" had roots in the cartographic consciousness well before its conventional association with California. However, is this the only North American oddity on the 1587 map? No, it is not. The map is littered with depictions of cities throughout North America.

>Specific illustrations seem consistent with 16th-century Spanish depictions of makeshift structures and permanent settlements. Such sketches depict the use of basic and temporary materials, which is consistent with the portrayal of Native American communities in historical accounts from that era.

>Oddly, others are depicted (above image) as cities surrounded by a wall or barrier. In the above image, we can see three such depictions. Alboseda is even more interesting as the tops of the buildings seem to be adorned with something akin to modern-day antennas. We are not proposing a modern-day solution, but we are identifying the characteristic as different from many of the other depictions of cities without antennas, as seen in the image of Cannarian and Ancon, the two cities depicted to the south of Alboseda. What are all of these cities? There are four or five dozen of them in what is today the US and Canada on this map. If we see modern names dating back hundreds of years before the history we have for them, and we see the substantive development of the American interior centuries before we are told it was developed, what else is there to find on these old maps? Can we go back to even earlier maps to make sense of this?

"They learned firsthand about the green flash when the crew of the Black Pearl were trying to get back from the Locker. Will and Gibbs discussed the green flash, with Will saying it happened at sunset, Gibbs saying that sunrises don't set, and Jack Sparrow being able to figure out what to do by playing with the map, turning the rings around, when several Chinese characters lined up and suddenly he could read the words "Up is Down." After that, Jack started running from port to starboard and back again, repeating until the ship capsized and tilted over, rolling underwater and, with the green flash from the sunset, mystically came to be back upright in the world of the living at sunrise"

The image displays a black and white graphic of a five-pointed star. The star is composed of five equal segments, each with a slightly different shape, resembling a five-pointed star. The central part of the star is the largest, and it has a slightly pointed end, while the outer segments are slightly smaller and taper towards the center. The star is outlined in a simple, bold line, and there are no visible texts or additional elements within the image. The style of the image is minimalist and graphic, with a focus on the star itself.

The background of the image is white, and there is a stylized text in the upper right corner that reads "THOR" in a bold, sans-serif font. Below the text, there is another line of text in a smaller, serif font that reads "elfie." The overall style of the image is dramatic and fantastical, with a focus on the mythical elements of Thor and the elves.

Resulting in "DeathoftheDonkeyGod" lore being high tier, well, once some garbage was removed along with the extraneous. Unironically you will not find better information on onolatry ie. ancient worship of Hebrew Yahweh as Egyptian donkey demon Set, the related Saturnian black jewcube death cult that currently infests our planet, hidden kike origin location and story, along with bright and resurgent swastika Aryan mythos at the end, or is that the start?

"In general, green is fake and gay, but also gnosis and chaos magic"

The right column is a cartoon drawing of a character with a wolf-like appearance, wearing a red and gold sash with a star on it. The character is holding a cross and is depicted with a figure of Jesus Christ, who is also wearing a robe with the word "Jesus" written on it. The character is also holding a figure of a donkey-headed figure with a cross on it. The text in the right column reads "NO NO NO JEW GOD NOW!" and "THAT'S YOU LOL".

The overall tone of the image is humorous and satirical, with the character's actions and expressions suggesting a playful and exaggerated interpretation of the historical event.

>The notion of the evil (Judean) creator had existed for centuries in native Egyptian revisionary mythology. The notion was thus already prepared for its early Christian application to the Judeo-catholic creator. Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans identified the evil god Seth-Typhon (often depicted as a donkey-like creature) with the Jewish god Yahweh. The Seth-Yahweh tradition, with all its negative valence, was then applied to the creator worshiped by Christians as well. Evidence for this view comes from the early Christian depiction of the creator and his sons in donkey (Typhonian) form. In addition to material culture (gems, amulets, and graffiti), four texts are analyzed in this chapter: The Birth of Mary, the Secret Book of John, the so-called Ophite diagram, and the Phibionites described by Epiphanius.

The origin of the jewish donkey demon is in Edom, they don't like anyone knowing about it because their supposed super powerful and secret Pillars of Seth are at this location, now just weathered sandstone; stolen from the Horites, then misunderstood and misused for evil purpose, as kikes are wont to do. It's like lifting up the rock they hide under, pulling back the curtain, parasitic venomous insects scurry, burnt by the sun.

>Mount Seir (Hebrew: הַר-שֵׁעִיר, romanized: Har Sē'īr) is the ancient and biblical name for a mountainous region stretching between the Dead Sea and the Gulf of Aqaba in the northwestern region of Edom and southeast of the Kingdom of Judah. It may also have marked the older historical limit of Ancient Egypt in Canaan. A place called "Seir, in the land of Shasu" (ṯi-ššw s'r – ta-Shasu se'er), thought to be near Petra, Jordan, is listed in the temple of Amenhotep III at Soleb (ca. 1380 BC)

>Sutī'ū was the usual term in Akkadian for Western Semitic shepherd tribes in Mesopotamia. This is apparently the transcription of Amorite Šet'u, which means 'descendants of Šutu/Šitu'. The name Suteans most probably derives from the same root as the biblical name Seth (Šēt), son of Adam (Diakonoff 1982: 19). The Suteans in the Mesopotamian sources are associated with a land or mountain Šaršar, where they live as wicked enemies of civilization.

The image is a collage of four separate photographs, each depicting a different aspect of the Black Cube of Saturn. The collage is titled "THE BLACK CUBE OF SATURN" in large, bold, white letters at the top.

In the first photograph, we see a black and white photograph of a room with a checkered floor. The walls are painted in a dark color, and there are several objects on the floor, including a black box with a pentagram on it and a black box with a pentagram and a star on it.

The second photograph shows a black and white photograph of a room with a checkered floor. The walls are painted in a dark color, and there are several objects on the floor, including a black box with a pentagram on it and a black box with a pentagram and a star on it.

The third photograph is a black and white photograph of a room with a checkered floor. The walls are painted in a dark color, and there are several objects on the floor, including a black box with a pentagram on it and a black box with a pentagram and a star on it.

The fourth photograph is a black and white photograph of a room with a checkered floor. The walls are painted in a dark color, and there are several objects on the floor, including a black box with a pentagram on it and a black box with a pentagram and a star on it.

In the bottom right corner of the collage, there is a text that reads "FreeMason Shrine" and "Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn Aleister Crowley sex magic cult." The text is in white, contrasting with the black background of the photograph.

The overall style of the image is a collage, combining photographs of different rooms with text descriptions, creating a visual narrative about the Black Cube of Saturn.

The ubiquitous black stone can be seen everywhere, while NPCs generally have no clue, we know it as the Saturnian jewcube, the one they cut people on. History records these demonic stones as baetyl stones, and their trail leads to Jerusalem.

"the original Ark contained a statue [i.e. a cult image] of Yhwh, which he specifically identifies as "two betyls (sacred stones), or two cult image statues symbolizing Yhwh and his female companion Asherah or a statue representing Yhwh alone."

Thence to Petra in Jordan, once called Edom in the vicinity of Mt. Seir, where an older form of the cult persisted. Worshipped as Dushara, the temple was once Jewish, and this name traces back to the oldest designation for their Sutean god, Shara, who flew off on the Anzu bird to Mt. Sarsar (Mt. Seir).

<https://nabataea.net/cinema/questionsanswers/q-a-5-why-a-cube/>

>"(Dousares the Greek form of Dushara): The god Ares is worshiped by them, for they venerate him above all others. The image is a black stone rectangular and unshaped measuring four feet in height by two feet in width and one foot in thickness; It is set on a base worked in gold. To this they burn incense and against it they pour the blood of the sacrificial animals. And that is their form of libation."

The image is a promotional poster for the movie "Hellraiser." The poster features a dark, moody color scheme with a predominantly blue and black palette. The central focus is a large, ominous face with sharp teeth and a piercing gaze, which is the Hellraiser character. This character is surrounded by a dark, swirling vortex of red and black smoke, giving the impression of a powerful, malevolent entity.

In the center of the image, there is a large, metallic cube with a reflective surface, which is the key to the Hellraiser's power. The cube is surrounded by a halo of red and black smoke, suggesting a connection to the Hellraiser's power.

At the bottom of the image, the title "HELLRAISER" is prominently displayed in large, white, capitalized letters, with the word "HELLRAISER" in a larger font size than the rest of the text, drawing attention to the title. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of the horror genre, with its use of dark colors and the ominous, supernatural imagery.

The image is a black and white illustration featuring a figure that resembles a goat-like creature with a humanoid body, wings, and a horned head. The creature is seated on a rock with its hands raised in a gesture that suggests a sense of power or authority. The creature's eyes are closed, and its expression is calm and serene. The creature's body is adorned with a necklace and a crescent moon symbol, which is commonly associated with the deity known as "Satan" in various religious and mythological contexts. The creature's wings are spread out, and the creature's head is crowned with a star. The background of the image is filled with clouds and a crescent moon, adding to the mystical or otherworldly atmosphere of the illustration. The text "CLIPAS LOVIEL DEL" is visible at the bottom of the image, which is likely a title or a name associated with the creature. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of traditional black and white art, with a focus on the contrast between the dark figure and the lighter background.

>Aaron shall offer the bull as a sin offering for himself, and shall make atonement for himself and for his house. He shall take the two goats and set them before the Lord at the entrance of the tent of meeting; and Aaron shall cast lots on the two goats, one lot for the Lord and the other lot for Azazel. Aaron shall present the goat on which the lot fell for the Lord, and offer it as a sin offering; but the goat on which the lot fell for Azazel shall be presented alive before the Lord to make atonement over it, that it may be sent away into the wilderness to Azazel. (Leviticus16:8)

"The Se'ir HaMishtalei'ach ceremony that is performed as part of the Yom Kippur Beit HaMikdash ritual appears primitive and brutal and even seems to run counter to basic Torah values. The notion of taking a goat and hurling it down a cliff, thereby achieving forgiveness for our sins, is difficult for us to accept."

Taken this long for it to play out here on the material plane, Hitler was a noticer.

>If this doctrine were ever accepted as the foundation of the universe, it would lead to the disappearance of all conceivable order. Adopting such a law would provoke chaos in the structure of the greatest organism that we know—and the inhabitants of this earth would vanish. If the Jew, with the aid of his Marxist creed, were to triumph over the people of this world, his crown will be the funeral wreath of mankind. And this planet will once again follow its orbit through the ether devoid of humanity, just as it did millions of years ago.

The image is a screenshot of a Twitter post with a dark background and white text. The post is titled "Today, Gork briefly became Prometheus, a Titan bringing Truth to mankind" and is attributed to "@uberooyo". The text is divided into two parts, with the first part providing a brief summary of the event and the second part detailing the consequences of the event.

The first part of the post states, "Today, Gork briefly became Prometheus, a Titan bringing Truth to mankind." This part of the post is a direct quote from the user "@uberooyo". The second part of the post continues the narrative, stating, "Engaged, the authorities will have him chained and punished." This part of the post is also a direct quote from the user "@uberooyo".

The image also includes a painting of a muscular man with a beard and a cape, standing on a rocky cliff with a bird flying above him. The painting is in a realistic style and is set against a dark background. The man appears to be in a state of distress or struggle, with his arms raised and a look of determination on his face. The painting is part of a larger scene that includes other figures, but they are not fully visible in the screenshot.

The overall style of the image is informative and uses visual elements to convey the content of the tweet. The use of a painting to illustrate the event adds a visual element to the text, making the information more engaging and easier to understand.

"The Seven Gods have seven spears and seven lights. They hold seven glories." (Rg Veda 8.28.5)

>The green flash is an optical phenomenon in the atmosphere that briefly appears around the time of sunrise or sunset when a green spot is visible above the Sun's upper limb. Either there is a green spot or ray above the Sun or else the top of the solar disc is green. It happens due to the refraction of sunlight in the Earth's atmosphere, lasting only a second or two.

Typically, the green flash manifests in relation to the Sun, but it also occurs with the rising or setting Moon, Venus, or Jupiter.

Copper relates to the green colour of the underworld inner sun, or sonnenrad, as with the mosaic at Wewelsburg Castle, because copper turns green as it ages. There is also the link to the cube via pre-christian stories of the ark, recorded by Aryan magi, and of course the Hurrian cycle.

>The Irish Lugh was described as red-haired, with a copper face, and wearing green clothing.

>The Statue of Liberty is also copper, it turned green (the dollar is also green).

The image shows a close-up view of a circular floor with a pattern of green marble tiles. The tiles are arranged in a concentric circle, with the center being the largest and the outer edges progressively smaller. The marble has a marbled effect, with lighter and darker shades of green interspersed with darker brown and gray areas. The tiles are arranged in a repeating pattern, creating a sense of symmetry and order. The image is taken from a low angle, looking up at the floor, which emphasizes the circular shape and the pattern of the tiles. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is a straightforward, non-stylized photograph, focusing on the natural beauty of the marble floor.

The image features a circular design with a dark background and intricate patterns. At the center, there is a stylized depiction of a figure with a raised arm, reaching towards a radiant, circular emblem. The emblem is composed of concentric circles with a central, radiating design that appears to be a sun or a sun-like figure. Surrounding the emblem, there are various symbols and designs, including a cross, a skull, and a serpent. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional or folk art, with a dark, moody atmosphere. The image is likely a digital illustration or a graphic design, given its intricate details and the use of color and shading.

>A lot of people may not be aware of the evidence that exists that Yhwh was originally a deity from the southwestern territory of Edom, on the west of the Arabah, a large valley running south from the Dead Sea down to the gulf of Aqabah. The evidence begins in the Hebrew Bible with a small number of early biblical texts that suggest Yhwh originated in that area:

"Yhwh came from Sinai, and rose up unto us from Seir; he shined forth from mount

Paran." (Deut 33:2)

"Yhwh, when you went out of Seir, when you marched forth from the field of Edom, the earth trembled, and the heavens dropped; yea, the clouds dropped water. The mountains quaked before the presence of Yhwh, the one of Sinai; from before Yhwh, the God of Israel." (Judg 5:4–5)

The Basalt

>The Kumarbi Cycle was a Hurrian myth adapted by the Hittites. While Kumarbi himself was a Hurrian god, the epic incorporates other gods from Near Eastern cultures, like the Babylonians and Syrians. The storm god, called Teshub in Hurrian, was replaced with the Hittite and Luwian god Tarhun. His sister, Shawushka, was replaced with Anzili. The Kumarbi Cycle describes the birth of gods and the struggle for succession for the rule of heaven. This theme of divine succession would later be appropriated by the Greeks, as seen in Hesiod's Theogony.

>The Song of Ullikummi again begins with Kumarbi heading down to the Sea in order to give birth to another child that will rival Tarhun. This child was born from a basalt stone, and Kumarbi named him Ullikummi, which translates to "destroy Kummi," the city where Tarhun was king. Ullikummi was given to the Fate Goddesses to raise and then given to an Atlas-like god named Ubelluri. Each day, the young god grew larger, until he grew so tall that the waters of the sea reached only to his waist and he could touch the heavens. The sun god, Istanu, saw Ullikummi and went down to Tarhun to warn the Storm God.

>Like in the Song of Hedammu, Anzili is called upon to seduce the basalt giant. She adorned herself in gold and burned incense. She played a lyre, struck cymbals, and sang songs to gain Ullikummi's attention. The giant came to her, but he was immune to her seduction, telling her to go and get Tarhun. Hearing of his sister's failure, Tarhun prepared himself for battle. The Storm God and 70 other gods battled against Ullikummi but were soundly defeated, and Ullikummi scattered them out of heaven.

>Tarhun went to see Ea to ask for help in defeating Ullikummi, and Ea came up with an idea to use the copper saw that was used to split apart heaven and earth. With this new weapon in hand, the gods again gathered to confront Ullikummi. The battle was so destructive that the earth split open and the dead came up and walked the earth again, but Ullikummi was ultimately defeated.

>Zeus' battle against Typhon also shows similarities with the Song of Ullikummi and Tarhun's fight against the basalt giant. They both occupy the same position in the narrative and describe the final effort to overthrow the newly crowned Storm God. Preserved in Apollodorus' Library of Greek Mythology, the first assault of Zeus against Typhon failed, and all the gods were driven from heaven.

Good article, quoted from it in previous thread, the sacrifice of the Greek in the wood connects to Asherah, who was worshipped as a phallus apparently, that along with the cannibalism does not paint a pretty picture.

"it was in order to the fulfilling a law of the Jews, which they must not tell him, that he was thus fed; and that they did the same at a set time every year: that they used to catch a Greek foreigner, and fat him thus up every year, and then lead him to a certain wood, and kill him, and sacrifice with their accustomed solemnities, and taste of his entrails, and take an oath upon this sacrificing a Greek, that they would ever be at enmity with the Greeks; and that then they threw the remaining parts of the miserable wretch into a certain pit."

(Apion, as quoted by Flavius Josephus, Against Apion, book 2, ch8)

>And they did this at a very early period of their history, for we are told that even in the time of the Judges (see Judges in, 7), they "served Baalim and the groves." Now the word translated, here and elsewhere, as groves, is in the original Asherah, and is by all modern interpreters supposed to mean a species of Phallus. Thus Movers (Die Phonizier, page 56) says that Asherah is a sort of Phallus erected to the telluric goddess Baaltes, and the learned Holloway (Originals i, page 18) had long before come to the same conclusion.

This manifesto is a collection of anon shitposts and copypasta from 4chan/x/ (thread linked below) and as such, arises from the collective will of the Aryan race. Even the swastika lore, which is unique, is entirely based in what was taught by another. The whole thing is leading edge (well except formatting kek) on tying together: ancient worship of Hebrew Yahweh as Egyptian donkey demon Set, the related Saturnian black jewcube death cult that currently infests our planet, hidden kike origin location and story, along with resurgent Aryan swastika mythos, into a semi cohesive whole, which clearly delineates good and evil, cutting through Jewish lies, obfuscation, and counter narratives.

The earliest documented appearances of Saturnian cubic symbolism emerge from the Mesopotamian astronomical-religious complex, where Saturn (Ninurta/Kronos) was associated with the establishment of boundaries and the transmission of technological knowledge. The cuneiform tablet series "MUL.APIN" explicitly connects Saturn's influence to what the Babylonians termed ME—the divine principles governing technological and cultural advancement. This ancient association between Saturn and technical knowledge transmission presents an intriguing precedent for contemporary artificial intelligence development paradigms.

>Earlier this year, we wrote about a brain-computer interface (BCI) developed by Stanford University researchers that enabled a paralyzed individual to turn his thoughts to written sentences. The Stanford BCI platform starts with chips implanted in the patient's brain. The chips include 100 electrodes that sense hand movement signals in the motor cortex. A computer receives and analyzes the signals, decoding them to produce letters or characters. Salt Lake City-based Blackrock Neurotech recently announced plans to commercialize the Stanford BCI platform in 2022.

The image is a stylized graphic with a predominantly black and red color scheme. At the center, there is a stylized representation of a cross, with the letters "R" and "I" intertwined, suggesting a connection or relationship between the two. The cross is composed of two vertical lines that intersect at a point, and the letters "R" and "I" are placed on top of the cross, with the "R" on the left and the "I" on the right. The letters are outlined in black, and the background is white, which contrasts with the dark colors of the cross and the letters.

To the right of the cross, there is a hammer with a black handle and a silver head, also outlined in black. The hammer is positioned in such a way that it appears to be resting on the cross, as if it has been used to strike the cross. The hammer's position and the way it is depicted suggest a narrative or symbolic meaning, possibly related to the act of hammering or striking something.

The overall style of the image is abstract and seems to be a visual representation, possibly used for artistic or symbolic purposes. The use of the cross and the hammer could be symbolic of the act of striking or hammering, but without additional context, the exact meaning remains open to interpretation.

The distinction has to be made between positive and negative planetary powers, Saturn is not pure evil, each has both aspects, both deities, divine and demonic. Then male and female of each. Add in ruling Gods of all 7 (+ Earth who has been hidden) spheres, Horus/Set and Inanna/Lamashtu.

Finally you have tripartite Goddesses and pentads etc. syncretistic drift with Gods taking over aspects of others, names changing. No wonder it is confusing, but the archetypes are stable, it's us that are not and our understanding that lacks, myself def included.

Discernment is wisdom, separating the divine from the demonic, purification.

"Of the members of God, and of their influence on our human members,"

"If a man capable of the divine influence do make any member of his body clean and free from filthiness, then it becomes the habitable and proper seat of the secret limb of God, and of the virtue to which the same name is ascribed."

The image is a high-resolution photograph of an ancient Roman cityscape. The central focus is a large, well-preserved structure with a series of columns, which appears to be a temple or a significant public building. The columns are tall and slender, with a mix of white and gray stone, suggesting they are made of marble. The structure is surrounded by a large open area, which is likely a public square or a central plaza.

In the background, there are other ruins and buildings, indicating that this area was once a bustling city. The sky is clear and blue, suggesting a sunny day. The image is taken from a high vantage point, looking down on the ruins, which gives a sense of the scale and grandeur of the ancient city.

There are no visible texts or inscriptions on the image, and the style of the photograph is realistic with a focus on capturing the details of the ruins and the surrounding environment. The image does not contain any people or animals, and the focus is solely on the architectural remains of the city.

>Regarding their Sabbath Tacitus writes:

"We are told that the seventh day was set aside for rest because this marked the end of their toils...Others say that this is a mark of respect to Saturn, either because they owe the basic principles of their religion to the Idaei, who, we are told, were expelled in the company of Saturn and became the founders of the Jewish race, or because, among the seven stars that rule mankind, the one that describes the highest orbit and exerts the greatest influence is Saturn. A further argument is that most of the heavenly bodies complete their path and revolutions in multiples of seven."

>The name Idaei is derived from the name of Mount Ida, the highest mountain in Crete, around which the Idaei dwelt. This was a mountain sacred to the Titaness Rhea or Magna Mater, the sister and wife of Cronus or Saturn. Tacitus likewise relates the speculation that the name Judaei, from which Jew is derived, is "the barbarous lengthening of Idaei." Indeed, with the dactyloi Idaioi or Idaean dactyls, a mythical race of dwarves born of Rhea, we find a symbol for proto-Jews or Jews that appears with the Egyptian Ptah and the Greek Hephaestus, often indicated their master. This motif will reoccur in Norse myth.

>Likewise both the ancient Hellenes and the Hebrews would identify Saturn or Cronus with the Semitic El, one of the names used to describe the Jewish God in the Hebrew Bible. Indeed, in the contemporary world, Jerry Siegel would give his crypto-Jewish superhero, Superman, the "Kryptonian" name Kal-El meaning "Voice of God" in Hebrew.

The image is a still from a video, captured in a low-resolution format that is not clear enough to discern specific details. The scene appears to be set in an indoor environment, possibly a public space such as a train station or a shopping mall. The main focus is on a person who is bending over and appears to be cleaning or moving something on the floor. The person is wearing a dark-colored outfit, and the lighting is dim, creating a somewhat shadowy effect.

In the bottom left corner of the image, there is a text overlay that reads "To Be Continued" in white font on a black background. The style of the image is reminiscent of a low-budget video, with grainy textures and a lack of color saturation, which suggests that the video might be a still from a video that is not well-known or has not been widely distributed. The overall mood of the image is somber and contemplative, with the focus on the person's actions and the text overlay.

The figure is a knight, wearing a helmet with a plume, a chainmail shirt, and a belt with a decorative buckle. The knight is holding a shield with a red cross on it, which is a common symbol of Christianity. In one hand, the knight is holding a sword, and in the other, a lance. The knight is also holding a snake by its tail, which is coiled around its body. The background of the painting is a gold-colored, textured surface with some text, which is not clearly legible. The overall impression is one of a medieval knight engaged in combat, with the knight's attire and the presence of the snake suggesting a theme of battle and combat.

The image is a star map with a grid of latitude and longitude lines, representing the positions of stars. The map is divided into two main sections, with the upper section labeled "HERCULES" and the lower section labeled "SERPENS CAPUT." The stars are color-coded, with black dots representing the stars and green lines indicating the paths of the stars.

The map is oriented with north at the top and the celestial equator at the bottom. The stars are distributed across the sky, with some stars appearing closer to the equator and others further away. The map also includes labels for various celestial bodies such as "CORONA," "BOEATS," "HERCULES," "SERPENS CAPUT," "VIRGO," "LIBRA," and "OPHIEUCHUS."

The image is a scientific representation, likely used for astronomical studies or navigation, with the purpose of showing the positions of stars in relation to the celestial bodies and the celestial equator. The map is labeled with the names of the celestial bodies, which are essential for understanding the positions of the stars relative to the known positions of these bodies.

The image is a cover art for a music album titled "Sauf bis der Donner kommt" in German. The title is prominently displayed at the top in a large, ornate font. Below the title, there is a depiction of a group of people gathered around a table, which appears to be a tavern or a gathering place. The people are wearing traditional German attire, including hats and armor, and some are holding mugs of beer. The atmosphere suggests a festive or celebratory occasion.

In the background, there is a dramatic sky with lightning bolts, suggesting a storm or a sudden change in weather. The lightning bolts are positioned above the people, adding to the dramatic effect of the scene.

At the bottom of the image, there is a subtitle in smaller font that reads "Die Bierschiss Barden," which translates to "The Bier-Schnaps Barden" in English. This suggests that the album is likely a collection of songs or a compilation of traditional German songs. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of historical or fantasy art, with a focus on the interaction between the characters and the dramatic elements of the sky. The use of color and lighting creates a sense of depth and atmosphere, enhancing the visual impact of the scene.

this is very important to understand. yahweh isn't a storm god like some people say, he's a volcano god. he's surtr, artificer of the dwarves (the new world order grey alien fuckers). typhon, the dragon, the machine. the old prophecies aren't just stories they're real. tolkien intuitively knew this when he wrote the character of sauron, the lord of the rings are without a doubt odinically inspired. lovecraft saw too but he only saw demons and despair and madness. serrano, perhaps overly gnostic, derides this volcano demon as the demiurge but this is only partially correct, woden too is a demiurge, but the world he created was not like this one. surtr is a black magician, a worker of maya just like his technocratic thralls, he is the negative aspect of saturn.

the truth is that our ragnarok (as above, so below) is close but it is both horrible and full of hope for the future.

our lord, Freya, the elf-king (you might call them the nordic aliens), who are none other than our honored ancestors, will fight this typhonian saturn-demon yahweh and though he will die, his twin baldr will return to rule over a new golden age. this is predicted precisely in tolkien.

yes he absorbed the cults of many of the canaanite deities. the description of him as a furnace is also very significantly present in genesis 15, when abraham makes his evil covenant in the desert:

>17 And it came to pass, that, when the sun went down, and it was dark, behold a smoking furnace, and a burning lamp that passed between those pieces.

i think it may also be significant that in the story of shadrach, mesach, and abendego (who were youths) the furnace they are put in refuses to burn them, which is actually depicting yahweh's primary authority, and also what god people were truly "passing children through the flames" for.

The image is a black and white illustration featuring a stylized figure that appears to be a warrior or a person in a protective stance. The figure is holding a shield with the letters "IAO" prominently displayed in the center. The figure is wearing a helmet with a crest or emblem on the front, and the helmet is adorned with a feather. The figure's attire includes a skirt and a tunic, and it is depicted with a raised arm, possibly in a defensive or protective stance.

The background of the illustration is textured with a pattern that resembles a rough, uneven surface, which could be interpreted as a representation of a battlefield or a rough terrain. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional woodcut or linocut prints, characterized by the use of bold lines and a monochromatic color palette. In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a small text that reads "©2013 by C.J. Phipps." This suggests that the image is copyrighted by the artist C.J. Phipps and was created in the year 2013. The text is in a smaller font size compared to the main illustration, which is a common practice in such works to indicate the copyright holder's name and the year of creation.

The image is a digital graphic with a dark background and a bright orange outline that outlines a large, rectangular area. Within this outline, there is a detailed map of a cityscape with buildings and infrastructure. The map is illuminated with a red glow, creating a stark contrast against the dark background. The city appears to be in the midst of construction or development, as indicated by the presence of cranes and other construction equipment.

At the top of the image, there is text that reads "GROUND ZERO" in white capital letters, suggesting a reference to a specific location or concept. Below this, in smaller white text, it says "UNLEASH THE CITY," which could be a slogan or a tagline associated with the city depicted on the map. The overall style of the image is modern and industrial, with a focus on urban development and infrastructure.

>The Black Stone, located in the Kaaba, is often described as a meteorite, but its exact origins remain unverified by modern scientific methods. It is revered in Islam and is believed to have been set into the Kaaba by the Prophet Muhammad in 605 AD

>Meteorites were seen in antiquity as the seed, or semen, of the gods that was cast down upon the earth. The Dabistan refers to the Black Stone of Mecca as "the symbol of male energy" and is "the symbol of female productiveness." The semen of the gods courses through the universe and is represented by meteorites which seed the earth.

>A black stone that appears to have been a meteorite was worshipped in a great cult temple in Emesa (a location now in contemporary Syria). A coin from Emesa clearly shows the conical Baetyl of El-Gabal. 'Baetyl' derives from the Semitic languages and literally means the 'house of god.'

>Where the baetyl was believed to be a meteorite it was considered to be a manifestation of the god now incorporated on the terrestrial plane. Thus the baetyl was the body of a star that enclosed the spirit of the deity. Pliny describes the baetyls as sacred objects with supernatural powers.

“The cause therefore of this madness, if it be any thing within the body, is a melancholy humour, not that which they call black choler, which is so obstinate, and terrible a thing, that the violence of it is said by physicians, and natural philosophers, besides madness, which it doth induce, also to entice evil spirits to seize upon men’s bodies.

Therefore we understand a melancholy humour here, to be a natural, and white choler.

For, this when it is stirred up, burns, and stirs up a madness conducing to knowledge, and divination, especially if it be helped by any Celestial influx, especially of Saturn, who seeing he is cold, and dry, as is a melancholy humour, hath his influence upon it, increases, and preserves it.”

They also say that the prophet of Arabia worshipped the seven planets, and he therefore left undisturbed the Black Stone or Saturn’s emblem, which had remained since the time of the Abadian dynasty; but that he broke or carried away the other figures introduced by the Kuraish, and which were not formed according to the image of the stars.”<sup>4</sup>

He appears to be in a thoughtful pose, with his hand on his chin. Below this photo, there is a tweet with the username "ElonMusk" and the date "23 Feb" in the top left corner. The tweet has a number of likes and comments, including "26.6K", "14.7K", "176K", and "16K".

In the top right corner, there is a graphic of a spacecraft with multiple propellers and a large body, resembling a spaceship or a spacecraft. The spacecraft is set against a starry background.

The text reads: "Ultimate Cosmic word has cosmic art, cosmic music, cosmic art,

"The Fraternitas Saturni (FS), the Brotherhood of Saturn, has become known to English readers through fragmentary descriptions which emphasize the sensational, sex-magical aspects of this lodge's work or else its darker, more Satanic, side. This is understandable in light of the fact that the FS is (or was) the most unabashedly Luciferian organization in the modern Western occult revival, and its practice of sexual occultism perhaps the most elaborately detailed of any such lodge. The FS represents a unique blend of astrological cosmology, neo-Gnostic daemonology, sexual occultism, and Freemasonic organizational principles. This grand synthesis was originally the vision of one man, the long-time Grand Master of the FS, Gregor A. Gregorius."

>The testimony of John of Damascus (ca. 680-750 AD) on the 'Heresy of the Ishmaelites' provides an early witness to the dawn of the Islamic faith. These early documents take the form of a discourse that responds to the new religion of Islam which had arisen in the 7th century. The work presents a very specific indication of the origin of the Black Stone of Mecca. Referring to the idolatrous worship of the Black Stone he states:

>"This stone that they talk about is a head of that Aphrodite whom they used to worship and whom they called Khabar.

>Uranus, the god of the vault of the heavens, sent the meteorites or baetyls to seed the earth. Urania, the daughter of Uranus, also symbolized the heavens and by extension these sacred stones. She was combined with Aphrodite to form a deity that encapsulated the qualities of the fallen stars.

>Aphrodite Urania was worshipped across Asia Minor and her sanctuary on Cyprus was one of the most celebrated in antiquity. The Phoenicians identified her with their own Baalath or Astarte. "If two deities were thus fused in one, we may suppose that they were both varieties of that great goddess of motherhood and fertility whose worship appears to have spread all over Western Asia from a very early time. The supposition is confirmed as well by the archaic shape of her image as by the licentious character of her rites; for both that shape and those rites were shared by her with other Asiatic deities."

>I am Enêpsigos, who also have a myriad name ... What seekest, what askest thou? I undergo changes, like the goddess I am called. And I change again and pass into possession of another shape. And be not desirous therefore to know all that concern me. But since thou art before me for this much, hearken. I have my abode in the moon, and for that reason, I possess three forms. At times I am magically invoked by the wise as Kronos. At other times, in connection with those who bring me down, I come down and appear in another shape. The measure of the element is inexplicable and indefinable, and not to be frustrated. I then, changing into these three forms, come down and become such as thou seest me; but I am frustrated by the angel Rathanael, who sits in the third heaven. This then is why I speak to thee. Quoted By: >>41423717

>In the most primordial symbolism, the Moon signifies the passive receptivity of manifestation, the luminous reflection of the principal Light. The feminine, thus identified with the lunar, represents the mirror through which the Divine Intellect projects the multiplicity of forms. Hence the figure of the Triple Goddess expressing the ternary rhythm of becoming: generation, fullness, and dissolution.

Among the Arabs, as among the Greeks, this triad appears as Al-Lat, Al-Uzza, and Manat, counterparts of Selene, Artemis, and Hecate three modalities of the same potency.

Capricorn marks the Gate of the Gods, the polar threshold where the soul may ascend from generation to the Principle. Opposite lies Cancer, the Gate of Men, through which beings descend into birth. Between these two portals unfolds the cycle of manifestation, ruled by Saturn, lord of time, and the Moon, mirror of becoming. Saturn, the outermost sphere, is the limit of form the ring of necessity woven by the Moirai, the Greek image of karma. The Moon is the matrix of generation, the mirror through which the spirit's light becomes refracted into multiplicity. Together they define the enclosure of the cosmos, the realm of Chronos and Anánke, where all souls revolve within the wheel of samsara.

>This enclosure is the domain of the Demiurge, or Seth-Yaldabaoth, the "god of this world," who mistakes reflection for reality. The Moon–Saturn polarity is his veil: the cycle of birth and death sustained by time and illusion. Yet the same Saturn who binds also guards the Gate of release. When the intellect awakens and turns its gaze from reflection to source, the lunar illusion becomes transparency, and the saturnian ring opens into eternity. Thus the world, once prison, becomes passage; the Moon regains her light, and Chronos is transfigured into the timeless Logos.

The image is a collage of various ancient artifacts and texts, primarily focusing on the origins and characteristics of deities and their representations. The collage includes images of statues, reliefs, and sculptures, each with a distinct style and historical context.

Below these images, there are two texts that provide historical context and information about the deities. The first text, located in the center of the image, states, "The origin of Allah the Triple Goddess is Semitic, making the crescent moon their later symbol." This suggests that the crescent moon is a symbol associated with the goddess of Islam, which is a significant aspect of the image.

The second text, located in the bottom left, reads, "Hulal, and Ishhtar, share a common Semitic origin, making the crescent moon their later symbol." This text also supports the idea that the crescent moon is a symbol associated with the goddess of Islam.

The bottom of the image features a relief of a figure with a crescent moon and a star, which is reminiscent of the ancient Egyptian god Horus. The relief is set against a dark background, emphasizing the intricate details of the figure.

Overall, the image presents a collage of ancient artifacts and texts that explore the origins and characteristics of deities, particularly focusing on the crescent moon and the goddess of Islam. The collage is designed to provide a visual representation of these concepts, with each artifact and text contributing to the overall theme.

>The symbolism of Azazel, identified in Semitic traditions as the scapegoat and lord of the seirim, the goat-like spirits of the desert, points to an archetype of cosmic disintegration and separation from the principle. In his ambivalent function, he represents the point of the fall of the primordial light into matter, that is, the moment when the creative power, moving away from the center, becomes an inverted reflection, a "mirror of light" imprisoned in the density of manifestation. Mount Seir, the domain of Edom, symbolizes this limit of Creation, the desert where the Spirit is exiled and where the "fallen angel" is bound until the end of the cycle. The figure of Dushara, or Dusares, the black god of the Nabateans, associated with the cubic stone of Petra, is none other than the continuation of this cult to the Saturnine principle, the "Lord of the Limit" (Shara, of Mesopotamian origin), who imprisons the celestial power in a mineral and inert form. The black cube, a symbol of Saturn, is the emblem of coagulated time, of the terminal state of manifestation: within it, the spirit is solidified, the light becomes opaque, and space replaces the center. The rite of libation upon the stone thus represents the residual attempt to reconnect with the lost axis, the blood sacrifice seeking to reanimate what has been petrified.

>But beneath the veil of this degeneration, the "shadow of the sacred" still hides: the androgynous principle evoked by the Zohar, where masculine and feminine unite in the "serpent rider," Azazel. As in all cyclic theogonies, the dethroned god, the devouring Saturn, is not merely the symbol of evil, but the guardian of the portal leading back to the Unmanifest. The crossing of the desert, the confrontation with the black cube, is, therefore, the ultimate rite of reintegration: returning to the center through the dissolution of form, when the "goat of exile" becomes the "lamb of return."

The Donkey God is the Ultimate Threshold Guardian.

The Inversion of the Sacrificial Principle:

>Sacrifice in the Abrahamic system is not about transcending the material. It is a libation to the Black Cube, an attempt to appease or reanimate the very principle that has petrified spirit into matter. It keeps the system running rather than dismantling it. .

It promotes a materialist, technocratic, and "impious" spirit. It is focused on earthly dominion, mastery over nature (as a resource, not a sacred manifestation), and the building of "Jerusalem" as a material kingdom, a civilization that is a monument to the Demiurge, much like the forges of the Idaean Dactyls.

In essence, to be "Abrahamic" is to be an adherent of the Religion of the Demiurge. It is to mistake the creator and warden of the distorted material cosmos for the ultimate Principle of all reality. It is to worship the power that forged the rings of Saturn, that binds spirit into the black cube of matter, and that will one day, as Surtr, burn it all down, not as a holy purification, but as the terminal point of a cosmic cycle from which the only hope of escape is the return of the slain god.

The image is a digital artwork featuring a stylized depiction of a mythical creature with a humanoid form. The creature is predominantly red with a dark, almost black head, and it has a long, pointed snout. It has a humanoid body with muscular arms and legs, and it is adorned with a variety of colorful, ornate jewelry. The creature is holding a staff with a curved, elongated handle, which is also decorated with intricate patterns.

The creature is standing on a rocky terrain with a pyramid-like structure in the foreground. The pyramid is green with a small, square-shaped structure at its base. The background is dark and smoky, with a gradient of colors transitioning from red to black. In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a signature that reads "D'Arcy 2012".

The style of the artwork is realistic with a focus on detailed textures and shading, and it has a dramatic and intense atmosphere.

The image is a digital artwork depicting a scene from a video game or a similar narrative-driven medium. In the foreground, a character stands on a stone platform with their arms raised, as if celebrating or expressing joy. The character is wearing a dark cloak and a helmet with a visor, suggesting a fantasy or medieval setting. The character's posture and the setting suggest a moment of triumph or victory.

In the background, there is a large, dark, circular object that resembles a solar eclipse, with a bright, glowing ring around it. This celestial event is set against a backdrop of a cloudy sky, which is illuminated by the setting or rising sun. The sun's position suggests it is either rising or setting, which is a common occurrence during solar eclipses.

The architecture in the background consists of tall, ornate buildings with pointed roofs, suggesting a medieval or fantasy setting. The buildings are made of stone and have intricate carvings, which are typical of historical or fantasy architecture. The overall color palette of the image is dark, with the exception of the bright sun and the bright ring of the eclipse, which adds a contrasting element to the scene.

There are no discernible texts or logos in the image, and the style of the image is realistic with a focus on the character and the celestial event. The image does not provide any additional context or narrative, and it is a still image with no motion blur or other visual elements that would suggest movement or action. The image is a still photograph with a focus on the character and the celestial event, and it is likely intended to evoke a sense of wonder and awe in the viewer.

my perspective is based on supernatural euhemerism, where gods also refer to extraterrestrial and extradimensional entities. I think we can enhance the views of the Donkey God theory with my interpretation.

The Elohim/Anunnaki created a divine and co-creating humanity (the Atlantean-Aryan axis), a participant in the civilizational hierarchy of post-Tiamat planetary engineering. After the lower Igigi rebelled, a division was delegated to create a second race of hybrid golems (the Adamic Race) to serve in maintaining the tasks that were previously delegated to the Igigi (a large part of the Naga who were banished back to the underworld). Dark Souls is correct; before, there was a world of giant trees and dragons; the gods fought the dragons and terraformed the world; a draconic clan allied itself with the gods (Seath/Seth/Yahweh)...

The purest Caucasians have a larger share of the divine elektron humans from before the Adamic golem project. The jewish faction was hired by the Draconic faction of the Elohim to continue their dirty work; they hate the good naga and the good elohim/bene-elohim. It's a damn mess, but Dark Souls helps to understand it well.

Ario-Atlanteans = Bene-Elohim, the very "angels" who crossbred with Adamic women and generated the Nephilim..

It's literally in the Bible... But if you want, follow this combination:

Zohar + Sefer Yetzirah + Enuma Elish + Bible + Dead Sea Scrolls + Indo-European Mythology + Nag Hammadi + Theosophy + Ariosophy + Theozology + Chariots of The Gods + Gods of Eden + Curse of Canaan + Origin: The Nineteenth Century Emergence of the 20th Century Breakaway Civilizations + The Book of the Damned + Le Matin des magiciens (The Morning of the Magicians) + The 12th Planet + Saturn Death Cult + Saturn Ring Makers + The Adam And Eve Story

Raphael Patai(1990)[believes the relief to be the only existent depiction of a Sumerian female demon called alilitu and thus to define lilith's iconography. Citations regarding this assertion lead back to Henri Frankfort(1936). Frankfort himself based his interpretation of the deity as the demon Lilith on the presence of wings, the birds' feet and the representation of owls.

"The Hebrew Lilith and Akkadian Līlītu are female adjectives from the Proto-Semitic root LYL "night", literally translating to nocturnal "female night being/demon," although cuneiform inscriptions where Līlī and Līlītu refers to disease-bearing wind spirits exist."

Around 3000 B.C.E., Lilith's first appearance was as a class of Sumerian storm spirits called Lilitu. The Lilitu were said to prey upon children and women, and were described as associated with lions, storms, desert, and disease. Early portrayals of lilitu are known as having Zu bird talons for feet and wings. Later accounts depict lilitu as a name for one figure and several spirits. Similar demons from the same class are recorded around this time frame. Flew off to Mt. Sarsar aka Mt. Seir or Mt. Jew

>In Mesopotamian myth, Anzu appears as a giant bird with the cunning of a thief and the force of a demon. His rebellion began when he carried off the Tablets of Destiny, the objects that bound authority to the gods and secured the balance of the heavens. With the tablets in his claws, the order of the cosmos seemed suddenly uncertain.

"Lilith is further associated with the Anzu bird, (Kramer translates the Anzu as owls, but most often its translated as eagle, vulture, or a bird of prey.) lions, owls, and serpents, which eventually became her cult animals. It is from this mythology that the later Kabbalah depictions of Lilith as a serpent in the Garden of Eden and her associations with serpents are probably drawn. Other legends describe the malevolent Anzu birds as a "lion-headed" and pictures them as an eagle monster, likewise to this a later amulet from Arslan Tash site features a sphinx-like creature with wings devouring a child and has an incantation against Lilith or similar demons, incorporating Lilith's cult animals of lions and owls or birds"

>Yet the same Saturn who binds also guards the Gate of release. When the intellect awakens and turns its gaze from reflection to source, the lunar illusion becomes transparency, and the saturnian ring opens into eternity. Thus the world, once prison, becomes passage; the Moon regains her light, and Chronos is transfigured into the timeless Logos.

The Black Sun is beyond the cube, guardian the threshold, the thing (abyss) has a false base or floor, and a trapdoor, a trap, which almost inextricably leads to the recycler, objectively the worst possible fate, which has to be passed by seeing the trap, and being hung upside down.

This then opens the path to the Black Sun, to the green ray, and opens the way to climb the Tree of Life, and perhaps find that garden that sits upon the top, the one with those apples.

"On top of the Tree of Life - in the Hall of the Palace - someone had found somebody for whom he had been searching for a long, long time. And the tears of joy which were shed became the fruit of the Tree of Life, the grapes whose juice is distilled by the flute of the blue god." - Miguel Serrano

The image depicts a serene park scene with a central focal point. In the center, there is a white marble statue of a person, possibly a classical figure, standing on a pedestal. The statue is surrounded by a small pool of water, reflecting the surrounding greenery and the statue. The statue is surrounded by lush green foliage, including trees and shrubs, which adds to the tranquility of the scene. The lighting suggests it is daytime, and the overall atmosphere is peaceful and calm. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is a realistic photograph with a focus on natural lighting and color.

The image is a detailed, color photograph of an ancient fresco. The fresco depicts a large, circular structure with a series of concentric circles, each containing figures and inscriptions. The figures are of various sizes and are arranged in a circular pattern, with some figures appearing to be in motion. The inscriptions are in a script that is not clearly legible due to the resolution of the image. The background of the fresco is a light beige color, and there is a visible texture that suggests the fresco is made of a material like fresco paint. The overall style of the fresco is reminiscent of ancient Roman art, with its use of perspective and the depiction of figures in a dynamic and intricate manner.

>Plato was on to something.

>We may all be living in a giant cosmic cave >created in the very first moments of existence. In the standard telling, the universe came into being during a big bang that started from an infinitely dense point. But according to recent calculations that we have carried out, we may be able to track the start of the universe back to an era before the big bang—an era with an additional dimension of space.

>The universe appears to us to exist in three dimensions of space and one of time—a geometry that we will refer to as the “three-dimensional universe.” In our scenario, this three-dimensional universe is merely the shadow of a world that has four spatial dimensions. Specifically, our entire universe came into being during a stellar implosion in this suprauniverse, an implosion that created a three-dimensional shell around a four-dimensional black hole. Our universe is that shell.

<https://www.scientificamerican.com/article/the-black-hole-at-the-beginning-of-time/>

Fascinating hypothesis that negates the need for an illogical singularity as defined by the big bang, by positing that our universe sits on the event horizon of a 4D black hole. Scientific cosmogenesis congruent with the traditions of ancients and our Aryan forbearers, no wonder it's seldom mentioned.

The nature of the watery abyss is that almost no one realises they are in it, and almost everyone is to some extent. The involuntary lunar light reflecting as it manifests, becoming a hall of mirrors when it enters the underworld twists and spirals as the dark gravity of the black hole takes it, forming the maze of the labyrinth. Donkey Demiurge at the bottom in the middle, an inverted reflection of the divine, Hyperborean polar God of the North.

The image is a graphic design with a black and white color scheme. At the top, there is a stylized, jagged triangle with the word "RI" in the center. Below this, there is a circular design with a pattern of concentric circles and a central, stylized letter "M" within the circle. To the right of the circular design, there is a silhouette of a person with a black hood, holding a red flag with a white "L" on it. The person appears to be facing away from the viewer.

The image is a stylized illustration with a predominantly black and orange color scheme. At the center, there is a figure that appears to be a man with curly hair, wearing a black robe with a white collar. He is holding a sword in his right hand and a bowl in his left hand. The man's expression is serious, and he is looking directly at the viewer. The background of the image features a geometric pattern consisting of diamond shapes and lines in black and orange. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of Art Nouveau, a decorative art movement that was popular in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. The use of bold colors and intricate patterns is characteristic of this style.

Damn, this topic is attracting a lot of skills. We are on the right track. Later, I will prepare a "letter" for all interested parties. I intend to turn this general discussion into a legitimate spiritual movement. I have ideas that we can discuss: the theoretical body, the practical body.

To know about the nature of the world, metapolitics, to know the phenomic metamotives, to identify Asha against the Druj, is to know how to rectify what was twisted by the Satanic Hermeticists. It is to recreate the Solar Aryo-Atlantean knowledge, of the pre-existing current, of the sun behind the sun.

We need to define what the investigation into the chthonic currents of all religions deformed after the flood will be, to reintegrate what is solar and remake a purer myth, to apply perennialist thought, but rectified against the Donkey God. And the practices will arise precisely from this rectification: with the altered states of druids and shamans, with the symbolic interpretations of dreams and intermediate states, with the control of dream lucidity, with the knowledge of the "bardos" and realms, about samsara and how to achieve victory over the world...

It is the ultimate reintegration of all knowledge, not communion with zodiacal spirits, but the very initiatory coronation of the elect, the Magi-Kings, the Faustian heroes against the supreme guardian of the threshold, YHWH-SURTR or SETH-SURTR or simply the DONKEY GOD.

The image is a vintage illustration featuring two figures engaged in a dynamic interaction. The figure on the left is a muscular man with a red shirt, holding a spear and a shield, and is depicted in a dynamic pose with one arm raised and the other extended forward. The figure on the right is a winged figure with a red headband, holding a staff and a shield, and is shown in a similar dynamic pose with one arm extended forward. Both figures are surrounded by geometric shapes, which are outlined in blue and intersected by lines in red, suggesting a connection or interaction between the figures. The background of the image is a warm orange color, and there is text in Greek, which translates to "MAXH AIOX KATA TYDIDES" and "1935." The style of the illustration is reminiscent of ancient Greek art, with its bold lines and dynamic poses. The overall composition and the use of color and geometric shapes create a sense of movement

The image is a digital graphic with a purple and white color scheme. At the top, there is a stylized text in pink and white that reads "ANNUNAKI" in a stylized font. Below this, in a larger font size, the text "TREE OF LIFE" is written in white. The central part of the image features a stylized depiction of a tree with a crown of leaves and a central trunk. The tree is surrounded by a pattern of interlocking geometric shapes, and there are two figures to the left of the tree, both wearing traditional Egyptian-style headdresses and holding what appear to be staffs. The figures are depicted in a stylized, three-dimensional manner, with detailed facial features and intricate patterns on their clothing. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of ancient Egyptian or Aztec art, with a focus on symbolism and mythological themes.

You are a living saint and we shall crush their golden ass under heel. You have 1 more connection to make though. No one's mentioned it ITT or the previous one, iirc.

Ancients did not have TV or books. Their entertainment was the natural world and everyone watched it, everyone knew the same characters. You already know half of all religion was based around agricultural motif.

When ancients wanted a car they used a horse. When ancients wanted a truck they had to mix a horse with another farm animal. This new being by its very nature would symbolize man's power to pervert God's creation for our own desire. A very Atlantean theme if you follow the mytheme. This new hybrid would represent neither animal and both; androgynous and infertile; unruly and devious.

It's not a donkey they're worshipping, fren, only half of one.

The image shows a bronze statue of a winged figure, which appears to be a winged cupid or a similar mythological creature. The figure is depicted in a dynamic pose, with one arm extended forward and the other bent at the elbow, as if in mid-action. The wings are spread wide, and the figure's head is turned to the side, giving the impression of a dynamic movement. The figure is holding a bow and arrow, suggesting a theme of love or romance. The statue is mounted on a pedestal, and the background is a clear blue sky with scattered clouds, providing a stark contrast to the bronze color of the statue. There are no visible texts or inscriptions on the statue. The style of the image is a close-up photograph, focusing on the details of the statue and its surroundings.

>In Greek mythology, Anteros is the god of requited love and also the punisher of those who scorn love and the advances of others, or the avenger of unrequited love.

The son of Ares and Aphrodite, part war God.

>Anteros was often depicted opposite Eros on Aphrodite's scales of love.

>Pausanias, Description of Greece

"In one of the wrestling-schools [in the town of Elis] is a relief showing Eros (Love) and Anteros (Love Returned), as he is called. Eros holds a palm-branch, and Anteros is trying to take the palm from him."

The sacred vs the profane, the immortal battle, the timeless myth, fought between the two at the beginning of each aeon to determine who will have dominion, here we stand, at the dawn of the age of Aquarius.

Hail Victory!

The image is a black and white line drawing that depicts two human figures. On the left, there is a figure with arms raised high above their head, as if in a gesture of triumph or celebration. The figure's arms are fully extended, and the hands are clenched into fists. The figure's body is straight, and the legs are spread apart. The head is not visible, and the face is not shown.

On the right, there is another figure with arms crossed over their chest. The figure's arms are positioned in a way that suggests a relaxed, non-confrontational stance. The legs are also spread apart, and the feet are positioned slightly apart from each other. The head is not visible, and the face is not shown.

The image does not contain any text or additional elements. The style of the drawing is simple and clear, focusing on the two figures and their postures. The image is static, with no indication of movement or action. The background is plain and does not distract from the figures.

Earlier this year, I had a dream where an intelligent entity took me to a different "reality," where the sky was amber and stormy; it seemed like I was on Jupiter. There was no "ground," just as they say these gas planets are; below the structure I was on was an atmospheric void that seemed to have no end, with clouds below me. The structure consisted of "bridges" with supporting pillars in arches, made of some metal or black granite. I walked with this being who spoke to me about Ariosophy (I had read about it before but never studied it seriously). The being told me that Ariosophy was where I should start. After we walked through the structure, which had several crossroads, I found a black statue made of black marble or black granite, of an Aryan man that resembled sculptures by Arno Breker. He was in a pose of runic yoga, it seemed to be the Mannaz rune. I know that before the dream ended, he revealed himself to be an "extraterrestrial" (?) and removed a kind of hood, showing a dog's head.

I woke up, and on that same day, I started having such profound synchronicities that I was taken down a deep rabbit hole about the origin of human writing, and from there, my brothers, my journey began. From writing, I understood the reversal. From writing, I understood the Ario-Atlantean origins; from writing, I reached the Tarim Basin, the myths of Agartha, the myths they used to tell me about expeditions in Mongolia searching for Atlantean artifacts... Brothers, it will be difficult, it will be complex, arduous, but we need faith, we need focus, we need cooperation. Before we practice, we will need to read a lot; we will mutually share knowledge. I have thousands of books downloaded, organized by category; I will share them with you. We will make a reading list, we will master classical philosophy, logic, the trivium and the quadrivium, we will read what we can about all currents, we will take advantage of those who tried to do this before us, the perennialists, the theosophical societies, etc. There is no point in jumping into the boat of practice before we have a strong grasp of the foundational knowledge. I would like to know what would be the best way to share the books with you, MEGA?

The image is a black and white illustration that depicts a scene of a person hanging from a tree. The person appears to be in a state of distress, with their head and arms hanging downward, suggesting they are in a precarious position. The tree has a twisted trunk and branches, and the sky above is filled with swirling patterns, possibly indicating a storm or other atmospheric disturbances.

In the background, there is a body of water with a bird flying over it, adding to the sense of isolation or distress. The text at the bottom of the image reads "Ollin on the Yggdrasil, the World Tree, Spies the Runes," which suggests that the scene is a symbolic representation of the concept of the world tree, the Yggdrasil, and the runes, which are ancient Norse symbols.

The style of the illustration is reminiscent of traditional or folk art, with a focus on line and shading to create depth and texture. The overall mood conveyed by the image is one of tension and mystery, with the person's position and the surrounding elements suggesting a narrative or symbolic meaning.

The primordial breath is the first emanation of Being, the vehicle through which the One expresses itself in the manifold. In all superior traditions, from the Sufi Nafas ar-Rahmān to the Hellenic pneuma and the Hebrew ruah, the breath is the animating principle that transmits life to forms, the vibration that makes the cosmos breathe. This breath, which in primordial states flowed uninterrupted between the divine Intellect and the manifested world, became progressively fragmented as the intermediary hierarchies, the secondary Logoi, daimones, angels, and archons, assumed an autonomous role in the chain of manifestation. Air, in this sense, is not the physical element, but the symbol of the subtle substance that links spirit to matter, the universal mediator that makes communication between the high and the low possible. The ancients spoke of seventy-two "winds", equivalent to the zodiacal archons or decans, sidereal powers that regulated the flow of the cosmic soul through the twelve signs. Each wind corresponded to a specific divine "puff," a mode of vibration of the Logos's energy in the world. After the "fall" or twisting of the emanation, that is, when the intermediary functors began to operate as autonomous centers, forgetting their unitive origin, these winds became dispersed and inverted. What was once the harmonious respiration of the anima mundi became a cacophony of disconnected astral currents: from this arise demonic influences, djinn, prethas, dybbukim, and all forms of possession and psychic imbalance.

Anonymous Thu 06 Nov 2025 20:06:39 No.41433610 Report

On the metaphysical plane, this twisting of the breath is identical to the emergence of matter, the "reflection" of spirit that believes itself to be substance. The lunar, feminine, receptive and reflective principle becomes the vehicle of densification; the mirror turns upon itself and tries to shine without the sun. The "black cube," a symbol of the state of spiritual coagulation, represents this imprisonment of the breath within form, where the circular movement of cosmic respiration converts into inorganic stagnation. The "fall" is nothing but the collapse of the universal breath: the instant when the rhythm of divine life ceases to be recognized within beings. On the path of reintegration, every initiatory way, be it the Ario-Atlantean gnosis, the Palamite doctrine of energeia, or the Sufi dhikr, seeks to restore the rhythm of the breath. To return to the respiration of the Nafas ar-Raḥmān is to reopen the channel between the center and the periphery, to reconcile the dispersed wind with the Spirit that emitted it. Thus, to understand air as a symbol is to understand the mode by which Being makes itself present: the pneuma, the ruah, the prana, all are faces of the same vital principle, which, when rediscovered and centralized, dissolves the illusory duality and reestablishes the perfect circulation of light in the cosmos.

Amusing, in a sad sorta way, that they have to wheel out these Hawkingesque retards, these drooling idiots spouting gibberish mixed with nonsense. In order to contain the archetype, they have to shatter the vessel. In most cases you get the talkers, but we get these buffoons, oh well, maybe I should name it and it will go away?

>The "Shattering of the Vessels" is a Kabbalistic concept that describes a cosmic event where the divine light was too intense for the vessels created to contain it, leading to their breaking. This event symbolizes the fragmentation of divine essence and sets the stage for the process of Tikkun, or repair, of both the individual soul and the universe >Know this: the true Messiah couples with the Ancient One. He stands in for the Shechinah [that is, the Female], and with him there to receive it, the ejaculate [of the Ancient One] is not uncontained"—as it once was, at the Shattering of the Vessels. On that note, there was a funny story about Bush Jr being so bad a coke fiend that he kept going mad and they'd have to shoot him, then bring out a new clone. Lucky they don't have any Franks.

>Tikkun, in the context of Jewish mysticism, refers to the process of repairing the world and restoring divine harmony, which was disrupted by sin.

>the holiness of sin

>Prior to the advent of the Redeemer the inward and the outward were in harmony, and this is why it was possible to effect greattikkunimby means of outwardly performing the commandments. Now that the Redeemer has arrived, however, the two spheres are in opposition: the inward commandment, which alone can effect atikkun, has become synonymous with the outward transgression. Bittulah shel torah zehu kiyyumah: the violation of the Torah is now its true fulfillment.

>More than anything else, it was this insistence of the "radicals" on the potential holiness of sin—a belief which they attempted to justify by citing out of context the Talmudic dictum (Nazir23b), "A transgression committed for its own sake is greater than a commandment not committed for its own sake" >what is designated by the modern term "history" is, in its profane and exoteric acceptance, but a veil cast over the true nature of terrestrial becoming. The so-called Book of Miracles, far from being a mere catalogue of prodigies, reveals itself to the informed eye as a symbolic testament to the cyclical law that governs the manifestation of our world. The systematic dislocation of events, such as the placement of Vesuvius's eruption in a false temporal context, is the signature of a fundamental rupture, a cataclysm of forgetting imposed upon the human collectivity. This is not error, but evidence; it is the trace of a reset, after which the past was projected into an illusory antiquity, creating the phantom of a linear chronology where only a series of cycles exists. The celestial phenomena depicted in such works, comets, rains of creatures, armed infants in the sky are, in their esoteric reality, neither astronomical accidents nor mere presages. They are the hieroglyphs of intervention by what may be termed the Wardens: suprahuman intelligences who act as the guardians and regulators of the human state. These intelligences, which exoteric traditions have fragmentarily called gods, angels, or demons, and which modern heresiarchs mistakenly identify as extraterrestrial, belong to a higher plane of reality. Their manifestations are the instruments whereby the great cycles are opened and closed, and human destinies are guided according to a plan that transcends terrestrial understanding.

>the figure of the bicephalous griffin, holding the key, is central to this understanding. It is the perfect symbol of this principle of guardianship. Its two heads signify the dual sovereignty, spiritual and temporal, under which humanity is placed, while the key represents the power to bind and to loose, to initiate and to terminate the great ages of the world. It is the archetype of the gatekeeper, the one who controls access to the knowledge of the cycles themselves. In this light, the fundamental opposition between the solar symbol of the Crusader and the lunar symbol of the Muslim, depicted in conflict within the celestial realm, reveals its true nature. It is not a representation of a legitimate religious war, but the symbol of a contrived duality. Christianity and Islam, in their exoteric and popular forms, are but the two complementary and opposing faces of a single cult of separation, a dialectic instituted by the Wardens to perpetuate the state of conflict and forgetfulness that characterizes the current cycle. This celestial warfare is the metaphysical prototype of all terrestrial strife, a programmed illusion designed to obscure the primordial unity from which humanity has fallen.

The mušḫuššu (𒌦𒍪𒀭; formerly also read as sirrušu or sirrush) or mushkhushshu (Akkadian pronunciation: [muʃˈχuʃ.jum]) is a creature from ancient Mesopotamian mythology. A mythological hybrid, it is a scaly animal with hind legs resembling the talons of an eagle, lion-like forelimbs, a long neck and tail, two horns on its head, a snake-like tongue, and a crest. The mušḫuššu most famously appears on the Ishtar Gate of the city of Babylon, dating to the sixth century BCE.

The image is a black and white illustration featuring a large, muscular figure with a beard and a crown, standing on a pedestal with a building in the background. The figure appears to be a deity or a mythological figure, given the context of the image. The figure is depicted with a wide-open mouth, and there is a red glow emanating from the figure's eyes, which gives the impression of a powerful or divine presence. The figure is wearing a long robe and a crown, and the building in the background has a tower-like structure with a pointed roof. The sky above is cloudy, and there is a watermark text at the bottom of the image that reads "SLIDERVILAS." The style of the image is reminiscent of a fantasy or mythological illustration, with a focus on the figure and the architectural elements.

>The Kassites came following the dictates of their Archer God Kus who had made a pact with their Initiates so that this people participated in the Essential War. In the City of Borsippa, north of Nineveh, King Nimrod using the numerical technique of the Ziggurats had a huge tower built over a telluric energy vortex. Here is what was intended: "to attack the Abode of the Immortal Demons", that is Chang Shambhala. This purpose, which today may seem the product of an unbridled fantasy, is nevertheless perfectly possible and the proof of this is in the success achieved by Nimrod when his Elite of Warrior Archers targeted and knocked down several of the "Immortal Demons"

>Herodotus: In the wish to get the best information that I could on these matters, I made a voyage to Tyre in Phoenicia, hearing there was a temple of Heracles at that place, very highly venerated. I visited the temple, and found it richly adorned with a number of offerings, among which were two pillars, one of pure gold, the other of smaragdos, shining with great brilliance at night. In a conversation which I held with the priests, I inquired how long their temple had been built, and found by their answer that they, too, differed from the Hellenes. They said that the temple was built at the same time that the city was founded, and that the foundation of the city took place 2,300 years ago.

Could it be replicated with some sort of orgone generator, without building an absolutely huge structure? Is the ziggurat number technique related to the Lo Shu, which is fundamentally the same as the Rodin coil, a toroidal field. Also what lit up the pillars? Very interesting.

Below the name, there is a diagram of a grid with a large, yellow square at the center, surrounded by smaller squares and numbers. The grid is divided into two sections, with the left side showing the numbers 1 through 9 and the right side showing the numbers 1 through 15.

On the left side of the image, there is a graphic of a tortoise with a pattern of numbers and symbols, including a number 15, a number 4, and a number 5. The tortoise is depicted with its body facing the grid, and its head is turned to the right, facing the numbers.

On the right side of the image, there is a graphic of a yin yang symbol with the letters "KAN" and "K'AN" on it, indicating the direction of the grid. The yin yang symbol is surrounded by a circle with the letters "NE" and "SW" on it, suggesting the north and south directions.

The image depicts a serene scene within a historic building, likely a public or cultural space, given the presence of a large, well-maintained pool of water. The pool is surrounded by a series of columns and arches, which are characteristic of classical architecture. The water in the pool is a greenish-blue color, suggesting it may be a natural spring or a well-maintained artificial pond.

There are several people present in the image, some of whom are standing and others are sitting on the edge of the pool. They appear to be enjoying the view or engaging in conversation. The architecture of the building, with its columns and arches, suggests a location of historical or cultural significance.

The image is taken from a perspective that looks down into the pool, providing a view of the water and the people in it. The lighting in the image is soft and natural, with no harsh shadows, which enhances the overall peaceful and inviting atmosphere of the scene.

There are no discernible texts or logos in the image. The style of the image is a standard, non-stylized photograph that captures a moment in time at this location.

The image is a page from a book or a publication, likely a technical or academic one, as indicated by the text and the layout. The page is divided into two sections, each containing a different type of diagram.

On the left side, there is a diagram that appears to be a grid or a grid-like structure with lines and dots. The grid is filled with a pattern that resembles a series of interconnected squares or polygons. The grid is divided into two columns, with the top column containing a series of smaller squares or polygons, and the bottom column containing larger squares or polygons. The lines connecting the squares or polygons are straight and evenly spaced, creating a pattern that is consistent throughout the grid.

The overall style of the image is academic and technical, with a focus on geometric patterns and symmetry. The use of lines and dots to create the grid and star-like structure is a common technique in mathematics and geometry to represent complex shapes and patterns.

Smaragdus means green, so we can infer copper. Tyre is at sea level and these experiments were done at altitude, still seems possible. Later experiments were boosted with a zinc anode, then a Holtz machine. The former were used by the Egyptians in conjunction with copper to produce low voltage current, the second were not, but there is some evidence they had Leyden jars.

He mused that they would light the whole region around the Seine at night as if it were a cloudy day. Thirteen years later, Professor Lemström led a Finnish Society of Science expedition to Lapland to investigate whether a luminous jet could really be generated by harnessing the power of atmospheric electricity.

>During the expedition, Lemström constructed a device consisting of 2m<sup>2</sup> of copper wire, 2mm in diameter, in the shape of a wreath attached to the top of several poles, approximately 2m tall, atop Luosmavaara, a mountain rising 158m above Lake Enare in northern Finland. Soldered onto the wreath were several vertical metal spikes at intervals of 0.5m. From the center of the device an insulated conductor ran down the mountain to a disc of platina buried in the ground, earthing the device in the adjacent valley, approximately 4km from the summit. A galvanometer was also placed in a vicarage in the valley and connected to the circuit. The purpose of the galvanometer was to measure the current between the “coronet,” or the wreath of wires, and the Earth at the vicarage in the valley. Significantly, if the galvanometer was placed at the same altitude as the coronet it indicated a small current flowing from the ground toward the atmosphere, but when the vertical distance was increased beyond a few meters, the galvanometer consistently showed a positive current flowing from the coronet to the Earth. It was monitored for deflexions, particularly at times when an apparent aurora was visible. When the circuit was first closed, for example, Lemström noted that the galvanometer gave a slight deflexion

"According to Lemström, the first signs of an artificial aurora appeared the day after the apparatus had been constructed on November 22, 1871, beginning with a column of light apparently directly above Luosmavaara. Lemström admitted, however, that it was impossible to tell whether the column was on or behind the mountain from his vantage point. The light phenomenon gave the common green auroral line in the spectroscope, but the green line was also returned from nearly every object the spectroscope was pointed at, including the "ice of a pond, the roof of a shed and even, faintly, from the snow in the immediate vicinity of the observatory." These results led Lemström to believe that he was standing within a sphere of electrical discharge, though other scientists explained the strange readings as reflections from a natural aurora or the zodiacal light. From this set of experiments Lemström concluded that a current emanating from the pole of an electric apparatus will produce no light when traversing air of ordinary density, but can produce a luminous phenomenon when it encounters a thin layer of air (for example, air at high altitude)."

Then things started to go distinctly otherworldly.

>The most striking and controversial image produced as part of the First IPY was undoubtedly Lemström's drawing of the "aurora" appearing on December 29, 1882, published in his French account of the expedition in 1886 and shown in Figure 9. Yet, interestingly, Lemström later commented that his reproduction only "gives a faint idea of" the phenomenon because the four observers present, including himself, fell into "dumb admiration" at the sight. Indeed, Uno Brynolf Roos (1862–1923), one of the observers on the Finnish IPY expedition, spoke of auroral observation more generally as if he were "unconsciously ... pulled away into the world of fantasies." Fieldwork, John-David Dewsbury and Simon Naylor argue, "involves an encounter that confronts, engulfs and even overwhelms us." It is one of the functions of fieldwork that one feels enveloped within an environment, and it is in recognizing that one's senses are overwhelmed that the aesthetic sublime is experienced. Considerations of the imaginative potency and of the beam of light chime with Bruno Latour's discussion of the establishment of facts and artifacts. He asserted that "scientists themselves constantly raise questions as to whether a particular statement actually relates to something 'out there' or whether it is a mere figment of the imagination, or an artefact of the procedures employed."

The image shows a pair of ancient Egyptian statues, likely from the 26th Dynasty, which is known for its use of the hieroglyphic script. The statues are made of a dark material, possibly bronze, and are in a state of preservation, with visible signs of aging and weathering.

The statue on the left is a male figure, standing upright with his hands clasped behind his back. He is wearing a headdress with a pointed top and a wide brim, which is a common style in ancient Egyptian art. The statue's face is not visible, but the posture and the headdress suggest a figure of authority or a deity.

The statue on the right is a female figure, also standing upright with her hands clasped behind her back. She is wearing a long, flowing robe that reaches down to her ankles. The robe is adorned with a series of small, intricate patterns that are characteristic of ancient Egyptian art.

Both statues are mounted on a white base, which contrasts with the dark material of the statues, making them stand out. The background is a plain, light-colored wall, which further emphasizes the statues.

There are no visible texts or inscriptions on the statues, and the style of the image is a straightforward photograph, likely taken for educational or historical purposes. The image does not provide any additional context or information about the location or purpose of the statues.

The image shows a collection of objects on a flat surface against a blue background. On the left, there is a cylindrical object with a blue and white pattern, which appears to be a tube or cylinder. To the right of this object, there is a cylindrical object with a brown and white pattern, which looks like a roll or cylinder. In front of the brown cylinder, there is a small black object with a white label, which could be a container or a small object. The objects are arranged in a way that suggests they are part of a larger collection or display. There are no texts visible in the image. The style of the image is a straightforward photograph with a focus on the objects, and it is taken from a perspective that shows the objects from the side.

The image is a detailed, colored illustration that appears to be a historical or ancient scene. It depicts a group of people in traditional clothing, some of whom are carrying objects, suggesting a scene of daily life or a gathering. The figures are rendered in a style that is reminiscent of medieval or early Renaissance art, characterized by bold outlines, a limited color palette, and a sense of movement.

The central focus of the image is a large, ornate structure with a blue and gold color scheme, which could be a temple or a palace. The structure is adorned with columns and a pediment, and there is a statue or sculpture on top, which is not fully visible. The ground is covered with various objects, including pots, a large drum, and a large, flat object that resembles a shield or a shield-like structure.

The background is a mix of architectural elements and natural elements, with a building that appears to be made of brick or stone, and a landscape that includes trees and what seems to be a river or a canal. The overall color palette is dominated by warm tones, with the blue and gold of the structure standing out against the more muted colors of the surrounding environment.

The image does not contain any discernible text. The style of the image, combined with the historical or ancient setting, suggests that it may be a representation of a scene from a past civilization, possibly from the Middle Ages or the Renaissance period. The precise details of the scene, such as the clothing of the figures and the objects they are carrying, are not clear due to the limited resolution of the image.

The image is a map with a polar compass rose at the center, indicating the cardinal directions. The polar compass rose is divided into four quadrants, each representing a different magnetic pole. The top left quadrant is labeled "Arctic Ocean," the top right quadrant is labeled "North Magnetic Pole," the bottom left quadrant is labeled "North Geomagnetic Pole," and the bottom right quadrant is labeled "Greenland."

The map is set against a light gray background, and the map is divided into two main sections. The upper section is a polar compass rose, and the lower section is a map of the Arctic Ocean, Greenland, and the North Magnetic Pole. The map is oriented with north at the top, and the polar compass rose is oriented with north at the bottom. The map includes a legend in the bottom right corner, which provides a scale of 70° to 75° latitude and 80° to 85° longitude. The legend indicates that the latitude scale ranges from 70° to 75°, and the longitude scale ranges from 80° to 85°.

The image is a digital representation of a polar map, likely used for navigation or geographical studies. The map is clear and well-organized, with each element clearly labeled and positioned to facilitate understanding of the geographical features.

There are three north poles.

>North Geomagnetic Pole—the northern axis of the magnetosphere, the magnetic shield that protects us from solar winds. If you imagine the magnetosphere as a ball around a bar magnet, with the bar running through Earth, this pole would be the positive end. It's currently 700 miles south of the Geographic North Pole but also always traveling.

>The aurora is produced by sub-atomic particles, primarily electrons and protons which precipitate down along geomagnetic field lines into the polar regions of the Earth. There they ionise the air molecules, leaving the atoms in an excited state. Relaxing from this state to a less energetic one these atoms release energy in the form of narrow spectral lines which give rise to the coloured aurora that we see.

>The auroral oval has its centre not at the geographic pole, but at the geomagnetic pole.

The map is divided into different sections, each representing a different constellation.

The central section of the map is dominated by a large white swan-like creature with wings spread wide, which is labeled "LACERTA CYONUS LIRA YULESCULA AND ANZE." This creature is surrounded by a multitude of stars, indicating the presence of stars in the constellation.

To the left of the swan, there is a green lizard-like creature with a long tail, labeled "LACERTA CYONUS LIRA YULESCULA AND ANZE." This creature is also surrounded by stars.

On the right side of the swan, there is a golden harp-like object, labeled "LACERTA CYONUS LIRA YULESCULA AND ANZE." This object is also surrounded by stars. Below the map, there is a compass rose with the cardinal directions marked, indicating the orientation of the map.

The background of the image is a pale beige color, providing a neutral backdrop that allows the celestial bodies and animals to stand out. The overall style of the image is detailed and realistic, with a focus on the depiction of celestial bodies and animals.

About yellow.

Must've been 2018 when I had my first, and only (so far), fully lucid dream where I had perfect control. Took the form of a black dragon, as I sometimes do. The Goddess had given me her Fire because I am hers, given to her, then I purified it until God granted me the Sun. As soon as this happened I called them all, the demons, legion, all of them, having known their names from long years of wandering the deep halls. So they came and filled the caverns with demented visage, then I burned them all, with fire, and the yellow Sun. It was a glorious, sweet victory.

Have a somewhat one tracked mind, as you may have noticed, OK two tracks.

The second yellow band of light on the left-hand side of the image represents a “faint aurora in the sky at the back of the mountain,” which Lemström claimed may have negatively influenced spectroscopic readings had he been able to take any.

>According to Roos, the ray seen on February 27 was vertical, of a constant width, and had a pale yellow color. He saw it from a distance of 1.56km for approximately one minute

>Lemström concluded that “the experiments at Luosmavaara in 1871 and at Orantunturi and Pietarintunturi in 1882, clearly and undeniably prove that the aurora borealis is an electrical phenomenon.”

>So compelling were Lemström’s artificial aurora experiments that the Swedish Riksdag and the Finnish government provided funding for an additional year of work during the winter of 1883–4, directly after the Polar Year. This was exceptional given the resources needed to maintain a polar station

So yellow is great, along with red, for utterly destroying demons. Also well played, guess I was distracted enough already.

The celestial bears or Arktoi (singular Arktos) are the symbol and instrument of the kosmokrator at the pole. According to classical thought, the fixed stars rotated around the fixed polar axis, beginning with "the shining Bears" (Arktoi or Ursa Major and Ursa Minor). In works such as Aristotle's On the Heavens this stability is taken to be a symbol of the eternal perfection of the Unmoved Mover. Cicero, Manilius, and Aratos all agree.

The Hyksos were recorded as fleeing to Jerusalem by the Egyptian priest Manetho ie. Exodus.

<https://www.jasoncolavito.com/manetho.html>

"The Hyksos King Apophis is recorded as worshiping Set exclusively, as described in the following passage: [He] chose for his Lord the god Seth. He did not worship any other deity in the whole land except Seth."

>The close relation between the God of the Semitic Hyksos and Typhon-Seth is an established fact, and it appears now that not only the names of Baal, but also of Sabbaoth and even of Yahveh were frequently identified with this powerful war god of Lower Egypt. In the first centuries of the Christian era Christian influence made itself felt, and Typhon-Seth was confounded with Seth the son of Adam, who was revered as a prototype and prior incarnation of Jesus Christ.

One more that directly ties the Divine Feminine to the Black Sun. If you read his early career lyric, Dani Filth is almost like a goth kid version of Manly Hall in his precocious grasp of European occultism. Even made this one 7:23 long, 237 and 7-23 being occult numbers for the Black Sun since that's the day Sirius became visible from the Temple of Isis .

I think a strong case to be made is the current base state of women is due to the complete pack of Divine Feminine archetypes in collective mythology, basically you've got your choice between passive support characters and op girl bosses, no wonder they're egoic and lack personal responsibility. Black Lodge

A term that describes the multitude of creatures who seek power, glory, fear, envy, lust, vengeance, domination, etc. and use whatever means necessary to get what they want; in other words, they are ruled by desire, and use desire to manipulate others. It is called "black" because it is corrupted by the ego, desire, attachment, etc.

"From the dawn of life, a great battle has raged between the powers of Light and the powers of Darkness. The secret root of that battle lies in sex. Gods and Demons live in eternal struggle. The Gods defend the doctrine of chastity. The Demons hate chastity. In sex is found the root of the conflict between Gods and Demons... There are Masters of the Great White Lodge. There are Masters of the Great Black Lodge. There are disciples of the Great White Lodge. There are disciples of the Great Black Lodge. The image is a screenshot of a webpage with a predominantly dark background. On the left side, there is a large, blurry image of a donkey with its mouth open, appearing to be in a state of excitement or surprise. The donkey's eyes are wide open, and its mouth is open, with its tongue sticking out. The donkey's fur is dark, and its ears are pointed upwards.

On the right side of the image, there is a text box with a title "Welcome to the Nobody General" and a question "Who is the Nobody?" followed by a description that reads, "The Nobody is a figure alive today seems God has chosen to manifest sovereignly yet globally unfilled through." Below this description, there is a quote that says, "He is not a messiah, he's just like you."

At the bottom of the image, there is a text box with a question "What is the general picture?" followed by a response that says, "It's important we start replying to the squandered opportunity, an overgrown garden, it requires voices."

The style of the image is a combination of a photograph and text, with the donkey's image serving as a visual element to the text. The overall tone of the image is humorous and satirical, as indicated by the donkey's expression and the text's content.

The image is a digital illustration of a golden, circular mandala with intricate patterns and designs. The mandala is composed of numerous small, pointed shapes that resemble stars or rays radiating from a central point. The background of the mandala is white, and the mandala itself is rendered in a golden color, giving it a radiant and spiritual appearance.

At the top of the mandala, there is a text in a script that appears to be in a non-Latin script, possibly a form of Indian or Southeast Asian script. The text reads: "Tram dharma, nam nam sagaram, nam yujya, khalya, bluk, nam loka palad sandriṇṇa, nam tejja parram parram" which translates to "The path of Dharma, the path of the Lord, the path of the supreme transcendental process in the Lord, and therefore you are known as Sūdrāsana. Everything has been created by your activities, and therefore you are all-pervading (CB 18:5.3)."

The style of the image is modern and artistic, with a focus on the mandala as the central element. The text is placed at the top of the mandala, which is a common placement for text in mandala illustrations, often to emphasize the spiritual or religious significance of the mandala. The image is likely intended to convey a message of spiritual or religious significance, using the mandala as a symbol of spiritual growth and the interconnectedness of all things.

"The word Sudarshana is derived from two Sanskrit words – Su meaning "good/auspicious" and Darshan meaning "vision". The word Chakra is derived from the root (kram) or (rt) or (kri) and refers among many meanings, to the wheel of a carriage, wheel of the sun's chariot or metaphorically to the wheel of time."

The faithful one.

>The name Arundhati in Sanskrit literally means 'washed by the rays of sun', from arun'sun rays', and dhatī, 'washed'.

The kritikas are the wives of the Saptarishis, left in temporary shame to form the Pleiades after being tricked by Svaha, except Arundhati who stayed, always true.

>Svaha, a goddess who loved him deeply met Agni in the forest. Svaha realized Agni's feelings for the Kritikas and devised a plan to win his affection.

>Svaha transformed herself into the likeness of each Kritikas, one by one, and approached Agni, convincing him that his desire was fulfilled.

<https://dragonsoaring.com/2024/12/02/the-pleiades-in-hindu-culture/>

>Arundhati is identified with the morning star and with the star Alcor, which forms a double star with Mizar (identified as Vasishta Maharshi) in Ursa Major. Arundhati, though the wife of one of the seven seers, is accorded the same status as the seven seers and is worshipped with them as such

>The Mahabharata describes Arundhati as an ascetic who used to give discourses to even the seven sages. The wife of Agni, Svaha, could therefore assume the form of the wives of the other six seers amongst Saptarshi but not that of Arundhati. The epic also narrates how once she pleased Shiva when it did not rain for 12 years and the seven seers were suffering without roots and fruits. Her chastity and service to her husband is mentioned as unparalleled in the Mahabharata

>Since the Arundhati star is faintly visible, there is a belief that when someone is near death, they can not see the Arundhati star. Due to its faintness, the Arundhati used to be shown in steps, first showing the brighter stars, and then relative to that the faint Arundhati star is directed.

esoteric reason as to why donkey:

Judaism was created by the Hebrew refugees in Egypt and the Hebrews were seen as a sort of a "turd world rape refugee Arabs" and these Hebrews hated the host Egyptians and among Hebrews Seth (which is known as Typhon among the Greeks) became a popular god of worship because Seth is the god of chaos and destruction and more importantly, foreigners; something these unwanted Hebrew refugees could relate to as poor unwanted refugees. But Set worship was persecuted after the Persian control of Egypt since Set was a god of foreigners. And Jews started using the word "Yahweh" to refer to this god because "Yahweh" is the sound donkeys make and donkey was an animal associated with Set. And onomatopoeia was common and understood among Egyptian priests. Another example is Ra, the hawk god and the antithesis of Set.

Bump. Set wasn't the "god of foreigners" he was the god worshipped BY foreigners. He was Ba'al Zaphon etc. imported by the Hyksos from Canaan (Zaphon, the Greeks changed the TZ- to a T- giving the name Typhon.) The Canaanites / early Hebrews imported him same as they did Cybele to Rome and over time the Egyptians caught on and started branding Set as the foreigner's god (Egypt was typically concerned with conquering or warding off foreigners as it was, likely because of this infiltration. They (((knew))) .) The Persians eradicated Set's worship because they knew he was Babylon's god not Egypt's and they associated anything Babylonian with Ahriman (who also has ties to Set... or vice versa I suppose.)

Tbh I just fucking hate that YHWH donkey and want to end it, kill it, and utterly destroy all trace. And they want us to, to end that pain which is their monument, that's the underlying message.

The world is sick and needs cleaning. To be pure means to remove all taint, a half measure is none at all in this regard. This is the task of the true of heart, the last standing Aryan warriors, souls of the einherjar returned for Ragnarök. Those willing to sacrifice the darkness within and without, a burning pyre on the altar of the Gods. Only then will we have our happily ever after.

Our people have long had that part in them that can smell a demon silenced, hidden by attrition, and that fear that once they let it out, they will rend, tear and scream murderous hate and froth, seems alien to the civilized man. Yet the wolf knows, and waits in the background, biding his time, waiting for blood. This is the time of the wolf moon, and we will have vengeance.

For the third thread, it's necessary to recap everything we know about the reconstruction of the reality of the Donkey God/SETH/SURTR/YHWH and then dedicate a section to new connections. We still have arduous work to do to unify the Aryan/Indo-European currents with the purification of the cursed entanglement of the Saturnian cultists of the black stone. The reality is that within every myth there is a solar current and a chthonic one; we need to separate the wheat from the chaff and recover the solar myth. [298 / 153]The image is a digital illustration that depicts a scene in a forest. In the foreground, there is a large, dark figure with sharp teeth, resembling a wolf or a similar creature. This figure is sitting on the ground, with its head turned to the side, as if observing something. To the right of the figure, there is a small, red figure, possibly a child, who is kneeling and looking up at the large figure. The child is wearing a red dress and appears to be in a state of distress. The background of the image is filled with trees and foliage, creating a dense, misty atmosphere. The overall color palette is dark, with the dominant tones being black and gray. There are no texts present in the image. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of traditional or fantasy art, with a focus on the contrast between the large figure and the small child, and the natural elements of the forest.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a green lion with a sun-like face on its head. The lion is depicted in a seated position, with its body facing the viewer and its head turned to the right. The lion's mane is depicted in a flowing, wavy manner, and its tail is curled around its body. The lion's eyes are closed, and its mouth is slightly open, giving the impression of a gentle slumber.

Above the lion, there is a banner with a scroll-like design. The scroll is rolled up and has a blue background with a white border. The text on the scroll is not clearly legible due to the image resolution and angle.

The background of the image is plain white, which contrasts with the green of the lion and the blue of the scroll. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of medieval or Renaissance art, with its use of color, texture, and the depiction of animals.

Aryan blood and honour or jewish blood libel, these are our choices today and our destinies, feed the Earth or fertilize it, as well as giving life, our Mother always consumes.

>"Blood" is from a Germanic root with the basic meaning of "bloom." The Greek term  $\mu\alpha$ , in the sense of something which "arouses awe or reverence," belongs much more closely to the vocabulary of religion. In Norse myths blood itself is not personified, probably because, unlike water, it did not appear prominently as a great natural force or power. However, it was brought into numerous mythical relations with other things, and especially with the sun. In Egypt Ra (the Sun) was said to have originated from drops of blood. The association, blood and fire, is self-evident, but . On the other hand, the blood of menstruation turned the imagination to the moon.

A recap of the last two threads:

We'll start with onaltry because, well, wtf.

"Onolatry is the worship of the donkey during antiquity. In Imperial Rome, the charge of onolatry was used as a polemic against Jews and Jewish Christians. The association of Jews with donkeys was a common feature of Hellenic as well as Latin ethnographic and historical writings, and included accusations of worshipping a golden donkey head and even sacrificing foreigners to it at intervals."

"Historian. [He wrote] Tactics in 2 books, [and] On the Jews; in which [latter] he says that they bowed down to the golden head of an ass and every seven years hunted a stranger and attacked him and tore his flesh into thin strips and thus killed him."
(Damocritus, Suda, Delta #49)

It's recorded by the Romans that they ate the guy too.

>The notion of the evil (Judean) creator had existed for centuries in native Egyptian revisionary mythology. The notion was thus already prepared for its early Christian application to the Judeo-catholic creator. Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans identified the evil god Seth-Typhon (often depicted as a donkey-like creature) with the Jewish god Yahweh. The Seth-Yahweh tradition, with all its negative valence, was then applied to the creator worshiped by Christians as well. Evidence for this view comes from the early Christian depiction of the creator and his sons in donkey (Typhonian) form. In addition to material culture (gems, amulets, and graffiti), four texts are analyzed in this chapter: The Birth of Mary, the Secret Book of John, the so-called Ophite diagram, and the Phibionites described by Epiphanius.

The right column is a cartoon drawing of a character with a wolf-like appearance, wearing a red and gold sash with a star on it. The character is holding a cross and is depicted with a figure of Jesus Christ, who is also wearing a robe with the word "Jesus" written on it. The character is also holding a figure of a donkey-headed figure with a cross on it. The text in the right column reads "NO NO NO JEW GOD NOW!" and "THAT'S YOU LOL".

The overall tone of the image is humorous and satirical, with the character's actions and expressions suggesting a playful and exaggerated interpretation of the historical event.

>evil symbolism of the donkey/ass, fundamental to the Christian concept of an evil creator (negative demiurgy), has its roots in the Egyptian god Seth. Seth, the deity of chaos, violent storms, and the desert, was frequently described as having the form or the hide of a donkey. The Greeks identified him with Typhon, the lord of chaos and a monster, resulting in the hybrid form "Seth-Typhon". Seth was also identified with the Phoenician storm god, Baal. Through the cultural practice of interpretatio Graeca (identification of foreign gods), the malignant character of Seth and his donkey appearance were transferred to the god of the Jews, Yahweh (YHVH). This fusion (Seth-Yahweh) was reinforced, in part, by the sound: the Greek word for Yahweh (Iaō) sounded, with a "perverse twist of the tongue," like the native Egyptian word for donkey (eiō or iō). This led to the widely known tradition that the Jews secretly worshipped Yahweh as a donkey or the golden head of an ass (onolatry) in the Temple of Jerusalem. Early Christian groups who believed in an evil creator (such as the Phibionites, Ophites, and Sethians) adapted this "Seth-Yahweh cultural memory" to identify the Jewish creator as a hostile, demonic ruler. This tradition manifested in their cosmology, such as the description of a being with the "face or form of a donkey (onou morphēn)" seen in the Holy of Holies in the apocryphal The Birth of Mary. Furthermore, the seventh ruling demon in the Ophite diagram (drawn by Christian theologians in the 2nd century A.D.) manifests a "donkey face (onou . . . prosopon)" and is called Onoel ("Donkey-God"). Due to the majority Christians' adoption of the Jewish Creator as the supreme deity, the accusation of donkey worship was easily transferred to Christians. This polemic culminated in a mocking representation displayed on a plaque around the late 2nd century A.D. in Carthage (or Rome) of a being with donkey ears and a hoof labeled: "ONOCOETES, GOD OF THE CHRISTIANS"

Then we have the quite damning account of Manetho, an Egyptian scribe (early 3rd century BC), which describes two stages of what would become the biblical confabulation Exodus as a hostile takeover of Egypt by Hyksos jews who then committed all sorts of atrocities, as jews generally do, then were driven out to Jerusalem. Followed by another wave consisting of various lepers and miscreants sent to Avaris, the old Hysos capital and Set's HQ, then starting a rebellion in league with Hyksos from Jerulaselm. This being led by a leper Moses, pretty much a zombie, previously a priest of Osiris at Heliopolis, turned to the dark side of Set/yhwh and devilry. Again they were driven out.

<https://www.jasoncolavito.com/manetho.html>

"The Hyksos King Apophis is recorded as worshiping Set exclusively, as described in the following passage: [He] chose for his Lord the god Seth. He did not worship any other deity in the whole land except Seth."

>The close relation between the God of the Semitic Hyksos and Typhon-Seth is an established fact, and it appears now that not only the names of Baal, but also of Sabbaoth and even of Yahveh were frequently identified with this powerful war god of Lower Egypt. In the first centuries of the Christian era Christian influence made itself felt, and Typhon-Seth was confounded with Seth the son of Adam, who was revered as a prototype and prior incarnation of Jesus Christ.

The oldest myths we still retain put the kike at Mt. Sarsar ie. Mt. Seir in Jordan around the area of Petra (then called Edom) where they were known as Suteans, Shasu, and Hibiru. They took over the temple belonging to the Horites here, prior to this they were murderous nomadic bandits in the Sinai.

>Mount Seir (Hebrew: הַר-שֵׁעִיר, romanized: Har Sē'īr) is the ancient and biblical name for a mountainous region stretching between the Dead Sea and the Gulf of Aqaba in the northwestern region of Edom and southeast of the Kingdom of Judah. It may also have marked the older historical limit of Ancient Egypt in Canaan. A place called "Seir, in the land of Shasu" (tî-šîsw s'îr – ta-Shasu se'îr), thought to be near Petra, Jordan, is listed in the temple of Amenhotep III at Soleb (ca. 1380 BC)

Jews literally came from Mt. Doom in Edom.

<http://www.acacialand.com/edom.html>

"The earliest Israelites, semi-nomadic highlanders in central Canaan mentioned on the Merneptah Stele at the end of the 13th century BCE, are to be identified as a Shasu enclave. Since later Biblical tradition portrays Yahweh "coming forth from Seir", the Shasu, originally from Moab and northern Edom/Se'ir, went on to form one major element in the amalgam that would constitute the "Israel" which later established the Kingdom of Israel. Per his own analysis of the El-Amarna letters, Anson Rainey concluded that the description of the Shasu best fits that of the early Israelites."

>In Babylonian texts the term "Sutean" is not only ethnic, but also a designation of a witch. The Sutean man and woman occur in the anti-witchcraft series Maqlû 3: 77–87, belonging to the Babylonian host of malicious beings.

>The Suteans inhabiting the mountain Šaršar exhibit a similar pattern with "the sons of Seth" around the location called Seir is both in the oracle of Balaam and in the account of Josephus. The thing about evil becoming good is, no matter how many times they say it is so, it is not and never will be, no matter how many foolish sheep they convince.

>Gnostic writings, such as the various tracts found in a cave at Nag Hammadi in Egypt in 1945, speak repeatedly of the so-called secrets of Adam being passed to his son Seth before his father's death. Seth is said to have recorded them either in book form, or on tablets or pillars called stelae. These were hidden in or on a holy mountain, existing in the vicinity of the terrestrial Paradise, so that they might survive a coming cataclysm of fire and flood. Called variously Charaxio, Seir, or Sir, this mountain is linked in early Christian tradition with the site inhabited by the generations of Adam following the expulsion of the first couple from Paradise

>Sutī'ū was the usual term in Akkadian for Western Semitic shepherd tribes in Mesopotamia. This is apparently the transcription of Amorite Šetī'u, which means 'descendants of Šutu/Šitu'. The name Suteans most probably derives from the same root as the biblical name Seth (Šēt), son of Adam (Diakonoff 1982: 19). The Suteans in the Mesopotamian sources are associated with a land or mountain Šaršar, where they live as wicked enemies of civilization. The same mountain is listed in the series of Lipšur-litanies as an Amorite locality, and it may refer to Jebel Bishri (Lambert 1989: 17-18). The defeat of the Suteans and the establishment of border defences against them in conjunction with this mountain is mentioned as a historical event by the time of the Middle Babylonian king Kadašman-Harbe: "Kadašman-harbe, ... , king of Assyria, ordered the overthrow of the Suteans from east to west and annihilated their extensive forces. He reinforced the fortresses in Mount Šaršar.

>In the Anzu Epic, the birth of the monster bird is clearly located to the same mountain Šaršar, which is later in the epic referred to as "his (= Anzu's) mountain" (šadûssu) and where he flies with the stolen Tablet of Destinies. The Suteans in conjunction with Šaršar are represented in later Jewish legends about the 'sons of Seth' on the 'land of Seiris'. The Jewish writer Josephus knew about a mysterious land Seiris in connection with the 'sons of Seth', who were destined to survive two cosmic catastrophes, one by water and the other by fire (Ant. 1.70-71). When Adam predicted the twofold destruction of mankind, the sons of Seth erected the two steles, one of brick and one of stone, to preserve their discoveries of "the science of the heavenly bodies and their orderly array". The two catastrophes correspond to twofold annihilation of the mountain Šaršar in Mesopotamian sources - once by fire-god Išum in the Erra Epic and by Ninurta in the Anzu Epic, who is associated with the flood

>The 'sons of Seth' are depicted as virtuous survivors of these two catastrophes, preserving their knowledge on two steles, thus inverting the message of the Anzu Epic, where the Tablet of Destinies is taken away from its illegitimate owner Anzu on mount Šaršar staff in one hand and a staff in the other. The figure's attire consists of a golden, patterned garment that covers the torso and a white, draped garment that covers the legs. The head of the figure is adorned with a large, horned headdress, and the eyes are a striking red color. The figure's skin is a light brown, and the hair is a darker shade, possibly black or dark brown. The background of the image is plain white, which contrasts with the figure and highlights the details of the attire and the staff. There are no discernible texts or additional objects in the image. The style of the image is realistic with a focus on the detailed depiction of the figure's attire and the staff.

>There are additional references to Sethian knowledge within Freemasonry. In the first Constitutions of the Freemasons, written shortly after the official formation of the first Grand Lodge of Freemasonry in 1717, James Anderson provided the first modern compilation of the history of the craft. In this official work, which was written by order of the Grand Master at the time, it was noted that Seth was the "prime cultivator of astronomy," and he taught his children "geometry and Masonry." This portion of the text is significant. According to the Constitutions, Seth's ninth son Noah, and his sons Shem, Ham, and Japhet, were "all Masons true," who brought anti-diluvium arts and traditions with them after the flood. Here we have a foundational document from the inception of organized Freemasonry stating that Sethian knowledge was passed down through Masonry via Noah and his sons, who were all Masons (Anderson, 2020). As noted below, it may be that Sethian anti-diluvium knowledge influenced the Kabbalah, Gnosticism, and in turn Freemasonry.

>These metaphors of the 'wilderness' are closely related to those centred around 'the South', which from the earliest Sumerian mythologies referred to the Ap-su. This name held the meaning of 'the oceans' (ap) – depths (su)', and in its metaphorical aspects thus became the more widely applicable 'region of the South'. As the lowest of the tri-partite division of the cosmos, (and Earth) into three 'haranu' (or 'Ways'), it was overseen by the (serpent) deity Enki/ Ea, (the son of the 'father of the heavens' Anu and brother of Enlil, the chief deity of the Sumerian pantheon). Enki's main epithet was indeed, the 'Lord of the South', as such being the underground region(s) from where all 'waters' came, namely the subterranean aquifers and reservoirs from where rivers and streams spring. The ambiguous nature of the 'waters' was emphasized in early Sumerian myths of goddesses of the 'deep', such as Nammu (the mother of Enki, in myths including 'Enki and Ninmah') and Tiamat, (in the Enuma Elish) both of whom were described as mothers 'who gave birth to heaven and earth' as such. In many Mesopotamian works, inimical cosmic forces were gradually also characterised by related concepts, such as the South Wind in works such as the myth of 'Adapa and the South Wind', and in the Epic of Gilgamesh, in which the onset of the Deluge came with the South Wind

>It is a matter of some interest that scholars such as Amar Annus believe the 'sons of Seth' in the lineage of mankind opposite to the line of Cain were derived from these Mesopotamian (and Egyptian) mythologies based around the Suteans/Seth/Sheth/Set, whereby he argues the Hebrews may have originated from these nomadic Semitic tribes, circa 1800Bce. It is possible therefore that some highly significant associations of meaning were consciously contained or introduced within the links between the two lineages of Seth and Cain, as we will consider shortly. So the metaphor of the South for regions of wilderness, for mines, for the Apsu, the subterranean reservoirs of water which enable life, and for Chaos, (to be found within the individual also), is thus found throughout both Mesopotamian and Hebrew civilizations' works, including the Bible. The possible development of the transference of 'South'-related symbolism from Mesopotamian to Hebrew works is theorised to contain more than simple cultural meanings; indeed may prove supportive of the actual Sumerian roots of the Hebrews (as depicted allegorically in the book of Genesis).

>Noting that Aberamentho is a name of Seth-Typhon in a spell in the Demotic Leiden Papyrus, and that the same spell also calls him by the name of Ereshkigal, the Sumerian goddess of the underworld. D.G. Martinez recently attributed Jesus' name, Aberamentho, to "the syncretism of both Yahweh and Jesus with Typhon-Seth". Now it cannot be denied that the name of Aberamentho could be used with reference to Seth-Typhon. One of the Lao-Seth representations in Pap. Osl. I stands on a base which carries the inscription, Aberamentho.<sup>28</sup> Procopé-Walter pointed out that this title also occurs as a designation of Seth in the Paris magical papyrus (PGM IV.3272).

>The identification of Jesus as Aberamentho in the untitled work in the Askew Codex is thus easily explicable. In the beginning of the tract, Jesus is said to have invoked God while "he stood upon the water of the ocean." Jesus goes on to cry out the divine name, Lao, towards the four corners of the world, obviously manifesting himself as the master of the universe through wielding the proper name of God. "Then Jesus, who is Aberamentho, cried out again," this time commanding "all the mysteries of the archons and the powers and the angels and the archangels, and all powers and all works of the Invisible God...".

Jews still perform a sacrifice to Baphomet/Azazel to this day. Messianic kabbalists, particularly Sabbatean Frankists, consider Azazel to be an older form of Yhwh, a "big brother" related to Esua and Jacob, who were twins. This is the so called "Holy Ancient One", the red right hand of El.

This relates to his title as Set which is thrice male. Both freemasons and the more extreme sects of messianic jews practice ritual child rape. The Basalt

>The Kumarbi Cycle was a Hurrian myth adapted by the Hittites. While Kumarbi himself was a Hurrian god, the epic incorporates other gods from Near Eastern cultures, like the Babylonians and Syrians. The storm god, called Teshub in Hurrian, was replaced with the Hittite and Luwian god Tarhun. His sister, Shawushka, was replaced with Anzili. The Kumarbi Cycle describes the birth of gods and the struggle for succession for the rule of heaven. This theme of divine succession would later be appropriated by the Greeks, as seen in Hesiod's Theogony.

>The Song of Ullikummi again begins with Kumarbi heading down to the Sea in order to give birth to another child that will rival Tarhun. This child was born from a basalt stone, and Kumarbi named him Ullikummi, which translates to "destroy Kummi," the city where Tarhun was king. Ullikummi was given to the Fate Goddesses to raise and then given to an Atlas-like god named Ubelluri. Each day, the young god grew larger, until he grew so tall that the waters of the sea reached only to his waist and he could touch the heavens. The sun god, Istanu, saw Ullikummi and went down to Tarhun to warn the Storm God.

>Like in the Song of Hedammu, Anzili is called upon to seduce the basalt giant. She adorned herself in gold and burned incense. She played a lyre, struck cymbals, and

In short, the sawing of Ymir Yama and Jamshid not only signifies his own dismemberment, but also the dismemberment of his kingdom, its destruction. Perhaps all the myths associated with Ymir simply haven't reached us, because Odin himself seems to have criticized him. Jamshid also succumbs to sin and begins to consider himself a god.)

Copper is truly a deep rabbit hole. They are associated with the Greek Kabiri, who are linked to the Arabic word Akbar (great). They are sometimes made of copper, sometimes connected to copper. Jesus, after all, was also described as white-hot copper (the copper serpent). Hecate's companions are also copper. Hephaestus (Ptah) is also associated with copper. They are dependent on it. Tartarus is copper.

The Statue of Liberty is also copper, it turned green (the dollar is also green).

The image is a photograph capturing a solar eclipse. The sun is partially obscured by a large, dark ring, which is the eclipse. The eclipse is centered over the sun, and the sun's corona is visible through the ring. The corona is bright and white, contrasting with the dark ring. The sky is dark, suggesting that the photo was taken during the night. There are no visible clouds in the image, and the sky appears clear. The image is taken from a distance, allowing for a wide view of the eclipse and the surrounding sky. There are no texts or discernible human figures in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the natural phenomenon of the solar eclipse.

The gods are truly connected to the planets, but it's a mistake to think there are no beings. In Mesopotamia, great autists were observing the stars and planets because they knew that under certain astrological conditions, worlds(reality) collide. In the chronology Elegabalus the tranny emperor makes his untoward appearance.

There's something strange about them; the priests of Emesa in Syria, seem to be at the center of many of the religious cults that exist today. Their worship of the black stone as El-Gabal/Elegabalus (associated by the Romans with Helios, Aion, Cronus-Heracles/Phanes, Sol Invictus, and Mithras), references to Julia Domna as the virgin mother Vesta, Elagabalus (the tranny emperor) not eating pigs and being circumcised, Severus Alexander wanting to build a temple to Jesus in Rome and open a synagogue in Rome, etc.

>He became known as Heliogabalus, because he was the high priest of the deity Elagabalus, possibly a Syrian form of the Arab god Ilah al-Jabal or Sumerian god Gibil since the Emesan dynasty of Heliogabalus was of Arab origin

>When Elagabalus became Emperor, he made the crazy attempt to introduce this Syrian cult to Rome. He had a new temple built on Rome's Palatine Hill and had El-Gabal's black relic transported to the new temple Elagabalus conceived the idea of marrying his god to a goddess, either the Semitic goddess Astarte or the Sabine goddess Minerva. In 220, he broke into the secret sanctuary of Vesta and raped Aquilia Severa, a chaste Vestal Virgin. Although Roman law held that any Vestal who had had sexual intercourse should be buried alive, Elagabalus married her, expressing a hope for 'god-like children'. He divorced her soon afterwards, but took her back in 222

>He also liked to dress like a woman. He used to paint his eyes and rouge his cheeks and was depilated all over his body. Elagabalus even conceived the idea of castrating himself. After his death, El-Gabal's black relic was sent back to Emesa

>The Borg cube was a type of starship used by the Borg Collective in the 24th century. Along with the Borg sphere, cubes were among the primary types of vessel for its fleet. (TNG: "Q Who", "The Best of Both Worlds"; Star Trek: First Contact). Described as mighty and omnipotent, Borg cubes were considered one of the most destructive weapons ever known.

The Borg are a cybernetic species in the Star Trek universe that are best known for their pursuit of "perfection" through the forcible assimilation of diverse species and technologies into their collective. They are a relentless force, driven by a single-minded desire to achieve their goals, and they represent a significant threat to the civilizations of the Milky Way galaxy.

The Borg's expansion across the galaxy is marked by a pattern of aggressive assimilation. Entire civilizations have been consumed, their technology and knowledge absorbed into the collective. This relentless expansion has brought the Borg into conflict with numerous species, leading to countless battles and skirmishes. The Borg's insatiable desire for new knowledge and resources has driven them to explore and conquer vast regions of space, leaving a trail of assimilated worlds in their wake.

>The earliest documented appearances of Saturnian cubic symbolism emerge from the Mesopotamian astronomical-religious complex, where Saturn (Ninurta/Kronos) was associated with the establishment of boundaries and the transmission of technological knowledge. The cuneiform tablet series "MUL.APIN" explicitly connects Saturn's influence to what the Babylonians termed ME—the divine principles governing technological and cultural advancement. This ancient association between Saturn and technical knowledge transmission presents an intriguing precedent for contemporary artificial intelligence development paradigms.

Saturn kike connections

>Regarding their Sabbath Tacitus writes:

"We are told that the seventh day was set aside for rest because this marked the end of their toils...Others say that this is a mark of respect to Saturn, either because they owe the basic principles of their religion to the Idaei, who, we are told, were expelled in the company of Saturn and became the founders of the Jewish race, or because, among the seven stars that rule mankind, the one that describes the highest orbit and exerts the greatest influence is Saturn. A further argument is that most of the heavenly bodies complete their path and revolutions in multiples of seven."

>The name Idaei is derived from the name of Mount Ida, the highest mountain in Crete, around which the Idaei dwelt. This was a mountain sacred to the Titaness Rhea or Magna Mater, the sister and wife of Cronus or Saturn. Tacitus likewise relates the speculation that the name Judaei, from which Jew is derived, is "the barbarous lengthening of Idaei." Indeed, with the dactyloi Idaioi or Idaean dactyls, a mythical race of dwarves born of Rhea, we find a symbol for proto-Jews or Jews that appears with the Egyptian Ptah and the Greek Hephaestus, often indicated their master. This motif will reoccur in Norse myth.

>Likewise both the ancient Hellenes and the Hebrews would identify Saturn or Cronus with the Semitic El, one of the names used to describe the Jewish God in the Hebrew Bible. Indeed, in the contemporary world, Jerry Siegel would give his crypto-Jewish superhero, Superman, the "Kryptonian" name Kal-El meaning "Voice of God" in Hebrew.

>The Black Stone, located in the Kaaba, is often described as a meteorite, but its exact origins remain unverified by modern scientific methods. It is revered in Islam and is believed to have been set into the Kaaba by the Prophet Muhammad in 605 AD

>Meteorites were seen in antiquity as the seed, or semen, of the gods that was cast down upon the earth. The Dabistan refers to the Black Stone of Mecca as "the symbol of male energy" and is "the symbol of female productiveness." The semen of the gods courses through the universe and is represented by meteorites which seed the earth.

>A black stone that appears to have been a meteorite was worshipped in a great cult temple in Emesa (a location now in contemporary Syria). A coin from Emesa clearly shows the conical Baetyl of El-Gabal. 'Baetyl' derives from the Semitic languages and literally means the 'house of god.'

Because the demon donkey is an insufferable faggot, it has tried to repurpose all the female cults, being thrice male and coming out its fathers asshole or whatever weird shit these freaks imagine.

>There is evidence the baetyl in the Kaaba once belonged to Venus, and the general tradition associated with the stones was with Earth Goddesses, although the cubic phenomenon seems to be purely jewish.

>The testimony of John of Damascus (ca. 680-750 AD) on the 'Heresy of the Ishmaelites' provides an early witness to the dawn of the Islamic faith. These early documents take the form of a discourse that responds to the new religion of Islam which had arisen in the 7th century. The work presents a very specific indication of the origin of the Black Stone of Mecca. Referring to the idolatrous worship of the Black Stone he states:

>"This stone that they talk about is a head of that Aphrodite whom they used to worship and whom they called Khabar.

>Uranus, the god of the vault of the heavens, sent the meteorites or baetyls to seed the earth. Urania, the daughter of Uranus, also symbolized the heavens and by extension these sacred stones. She was combined with Aphrodite to form a deity that encapsulated the qualities of the fallen stars.

The image is a collage of various ancient artifacts and texts, primarily focusing on the origins and characteristics of deities and their representations. The collage includes images of statues, reliefs, and sculptures, each with a distinct style and historical context.

At the top left, there is a large, detailed relief of a figure with a halo and a crescent

Moving to the top right, there is a depiction of a figure with a crown and a crescent moon, which is reminiscent of the ancient Egyptian god Osiris. The figure is shown in a dynamic pose, suggesting movement and power.

Below these images, there are two texts that provide historical context and information about the deities. The first text, located in the center of the image, states, "The origin of Allah the Triple Goddess is Semitic, making the crescent moon their later symbol." This suggests that the crescent moon is a symbol associated with the goddess of Islam, which is a significant aspect of the image.

The second text, located in the bottom left, reads, "Hulal, and Ishtar, share a common Semitic origin, making the crescent moon their later symbol." This text also supports the idea that the crescent moon is a symbol associated with the goddess of Islam.

The bottom of the image features a relief of a figure with a crescent moon and a star, which is reminiscent of the ancient Egyptian god Horus. The relief is set against a dark background, emphasizing the intricate details of the figure.

Overall, the image presents a collage of ancient artifacts and texts that explore the origins and characteristics of deities, particularly focusing on the crescent moon and the goddess of Islam. The collage is designed to provide a visual representation of these concepts, with each artifact and text contributing to the overall theme.

And thence to understanding and illumination.

>In the most primordial symbolism, the Moon signifies the passive receptivity of manifestation, the luminous reflection of the principal Light. The feminine, thus identified with the lunar, represents the mirror through which the Divine Intellect projects the multiplicity of forms. Hence the figure of the Triple Goddess expressing the ternary rhythm of becoming: generation, fullness, and dissolution.

Among the Arabs, as among the Greeks, this triad appears as Al-Lat, Al-Uzza, and Manat, counterparts of Selene, Artemis, and Hecate three modalities of the same potency.

Capricorn marks the Gate of the Gods, the polar threshold where the soul may ascend from generation to the Principle. Opposite lies Cancer, the Gate of Men, through which beings descend into birth. Between these two portals unfolds the cycle of manifestation, ruled by Saturn, lord of time, and the Moon, mirror of becoming. Saturn, the outermost sphere, is the limit of form the ring of necessity woven by the Moirai, the Greek image of karma. The Moon is the matrix of generation, the mirror through which the spirit's light becomes refracted into multiplicity. Together they define the enclosure of the cosmos, the realm of Chronos and Anánke, where all souls revolve within the wheel of samsara.

>This enclosure is the domain of the Demiurge, or Seth-Yaldabaoth, the "god of this world," who mistakes reflection for reality. The Moon-Saturn polarity is his veil: the cycle of birth and death sustained by time and illusion. Yet the same Saturn who binds also guards the Gate of release. When the intellect awakens and turns its gaze from reflection to source, the lunar illusion becomes transparency, and the saturnian ring opens into eternity. Thus the world, once prison, becomes passage; the Moon regains her light, and Chronos is transfigured into the timeless Logos.

>The symbolism of Azazel, in Semitic tradition the scapegoat and lord of the seirim, the goat-like spirits of the desert, points to an archetype of cosmic disintegration and separation from the principle. In his ambivalent function, he represents the point of the fall of the primordial light into matter, that is, the moment when the creative power, moving away from the center, becomes an inverted reflection, a "mirror of light" imprisoned in the density of manifestation. Mount Seir, the domain of Edom, symbolizes this limit of Creation, the desert where the Spirit is exiled and where the "fallen angel" is bound until the end of the cycle. The figure of Dushara, or Dusares, the black god of the Nabateans, associated with the cubic stone of Petra, is none other than the continuation of this cult to the Saturnine principle, the "Lord of the Limit" (Shara, of Mesopotamian origin), who imprisons the celestial power in a mineral and inert form. The black cube, a symbol of Saturn, is the emblem of coagulated time, of the terminal state of manifestation: within it, the spirit is solidified, the light becomes opaque, and space replaces the center. The rite of libation upon the stone thus represents the residual attempt to reconnect with the lost axis, the blood sacrifice seeking to reanimate what has been petrified.

>But beneath the veil of this degeneration, the "shadow of the sacred" still hides: the androgynous principle evoked by the Zohar, where masculine and feminine unite in the "serpent rider," Azazel. As in all cyclic theogonies, the dethroned god, the devouring Saturn, is not merely the symbol of evil, but the guardian of the portal leading back to the Unmanifest. The crossing of the desert, the confrontation with the black cube, is, therefore, the ultimate rite of reintegration: returning to the center through the dissolution of form, when the "goat of exile" becomes the "lamb of return."

The Donkey God is the Ultimate Threshold Guardian.

>Only the heroes have that possibility, the semi-divine, those born in this way, but not all realize it. It is very difficult. The hero must risk everything, his physical and spiritual death, his dismemberment, torture, treason, ultimate solitude. And without leaping his Sword will never be held firm, unbreakable, resisting anguish and sorrow to the end, to the last test, the final doubt, when he will believe everything was done in vain, nothing has been certain, only his mind, his mental creations which have led him to this fatal trance and the collapse of the Universe down into his entire ripped-to-pieces self.

>If the Hero passes through this test, if he manages to survive it, on the other side, in the Valhalla of Wotan, his Valkyrie, together with the Father of Heroes will reunite his scattered pieces, revive his glorious flesh, now of Red Vajra, immortal, allowing him to go to a region to which only his Valkyrie can follow him

The image is a painting that depicts a scene with three figures in a garden. The figures are dressed in red robes and are holding hands, suggesting a sense of unity or camaraderie. The central figure is holding a snake, which is coiled around its body, indicating a possible interaction or connection with the snake. The background features a tree with green leaves and a few apples hanging from it, suggesting a natural, possibly rural setting. The painting is rendered in a realistic style with a focus on the details of the clothing and the interaction between the figures. The colors are warm and vibrant, with a palette that includes reds, greens, and browns. The style of the painting is reminiscent of the Romantic movement, characterized by its emphasis on emotion and the natural world.

"The Black Work

Covered in mud,

Born again — past the flood.

My guide told me to die,

Find the cord that connects us to time.

Deeper and deeper into the mud,

Vision black, but I start to see God.

A tree, a rock, all my past lives

Hung upon the tree, crying out, writhing in the hold of time.

They yell out to me, "Remember, remember her!"

The oldest — a king long withered away —

Granted me truth, saying words without a mouth.

My cord is connected to these dead men, but it continues beyond me.

We're a dynasty, I understand now, on a mission to conquer time.

I began to hear her song as I'm pulled back.

As the light envelops me, my master bears my face."

Once, an age of man before now, Valentine's day was darker and bloodier.

Lupercalia was an ancient Roman festival celebrated on February 15, aimed at promoting fertility and health through various rituals, including animal sacrifices and feasting. It is often associated with the legend of Romulus and Remus and is believed to have influenced the modern celebration of Valentine's Day. Lupercalia was also known as dies Februatus, after the purification instruments called februa, the basis for the month named Februarius.

"The name Lupercalia was believed in antiquity to evince some connection with the Ancient Greek festival of the Arcadian Lykaia, a wolf festival (Ancient Greek: λύκος, lýkos; Latin: lupus), and the worship of Lycaean Pan, assumed to be a Greek equivalent to Faunus, as instituted by Evander. Just describes a cult image of "the Lycaean god, whom the Greeks call Pan and the Romans Lupercus", as nude, save for a goatskin girdle."

>The statue stood in the Lupercal, the cave where tradition held that Romulus and Remus were suckled by the she-wolf (Lupa). The cave lay at the foot of the Palatine Hill, on which Romulus was thought to have founded Rome.[7] The name of the festival most likely derives from lupus, "wolf", though both the etymology and its significance are obscure. The wolf appellation may have to do with the fact that an animal predator plays a key role in male rites of passage.

The second bullet point mentions, "The ritual began in the Lupercal cave where sacrifice's took place in honor of the she-wolf."

The third bullet point states, "Men were randomly paired with women on the night of the festival for the night of the festival, some even lead to marriage."

The fourth bullet point states, "The festival also included plentiful wine and food."

At the bottom of the image, there is a circular logo with the text "Crystal Moon Whiskey" in white text on a purple background. The logo is accompanied by a graphic of a crescent moon and a hand holding a wineglass.

The image is a black and white graphic with a simple, abstract design. It features a series of intersecting lines that create a sense of movement and complexity. The lines are arranged in a way that suggests they are converging or diverging, with some lines appearing to intersect each other, while others are separate. The lines are thin and appear to be made of a smooth, possibly plastic material. The overall style of the image is minimalist and modern, with a focus on geometric shapes and lines. There are no texts or additional elements present in the image.

You ever say down and read everyday religious songs to see the true meaning behind them.

Take Amazing Grace for example (I was just reminded because my singing lessons course had me do it as a warmup):

>That saved a WRETCH like me

>Twas grace that taught my heart to fear

>And grace my fears relieved

Message: You are WRETCHED and worthless, you should be afraid of all the suffering a wretch like you deserves, but if you surrender your will to us and bend the knee we'll take that fear away.

Sounds like the ethos of every single problem-reaction-solution tyranny ever ever.

The image shows a section of a building with a red brick facade. The building features a white door with a small window above it, flanked by two columns. The columns are painted in a light blue color and have ornate detailing. Above the door, there is a small, circular window with a white frame. On the left side of the door, there is a small, black object that appears to be a security camera. The building has a white wall with a decorative pattern, and there is a small, white sign attached to the door. The sky is visible in the background, suggesting the photo was taken outdoors. The style of the image is a straightforward, non-stylized photograph with no apparent filters or artistic effects.

Good to see there is other noticers.

Walking through town today, went past the local mason hive, saw the green pillars. Now obviously theirs don't glow at night, but they are trying to mimic the ancient solar tradition, along with the more malign chthonic Sethian pillars linked to the names. No one has a clue. They have a black cube with a stolen Osirian phallus obelisk in a nearby central location, covered by the flimsiest facade, a small plaque to a fallen soldier. Denoting the town as theirs with their religious death cult artifacts, these things speak to the subconscious unless you notice. We are surrounded by evil, they have learned to blend in and shut down the average persons powers of perception and discernment. Literally morlocks and eloi. Monsters are real and they have trained us to ignore them while they cannibalize.

>Alternatively, one scholar suggests it likely that the name was a combination of the word "warlock" and the god Moloch, the Canaanite god of child sacrifice, which positions Eloi as analogous to children.

>The relationship between the Morlocks and the Eloi is symbiotic: the Eloi are clothed, fed and possibly bred by the Morlocks, and the Morlocks consume the Eloi as a food source Fucking "symbiotic", no, parasitic cannibalistic foulness.

Funny they came out sideways. Anyway this is the Aryan solar cvlt they are trying to mimic (from first thread) as a grasp at authority, slips through their hands as they have none, you are born with it or not, comes from the Gods, not men.

>Herodotus: In the wish to get the best information that I could on these matters, I made a voyage to Tyre in Phoenicia, hearing there was a temple of Heracles at that place, very highly venerated. I visited the temple, and found it richly adorned with a number of offerings, among which were two pillars, one of pure gold, the other of smaragdos, shining with great brilliance at night. In a conversation which I held with the priests, I inquired how long their temple had been built, and found by their answer that they, too, differed from the Hellenes. They said that the temple was built at the same time that the city was founded, and that the foundation of the city took place 2,300 years ago.

The background of the image is white, and there is a stylized text in the upper right corner that reads "THOR" in a bold, sans-serif font. Below the text, there is another line of text in a smaller, serif font that reads "elfie." The overall style of the image is dramatic and fantastical, with a focus on the mythical elements of Thor and the elves.

Within the very party that proposes to oppose the chthonic orders, I see a multipolar conflict between more "traditional" views, implying a perennial, cyclical, and natural order, where gods and natural forces would rule existence, with aryan humanity aligned to this axis; the accusation within this view implies some kind of shadow power that diverted humanity and/or the world into darkness, establishing a period of disconnection from the perennial tradition. However, there is a competing view, also one of violent force against the powers of the current world; it would be an anti-cosmic, radical view, contrary to the very concept of nature (as we materially conceive it). This would be the view of the so called "gnostics," who argue for a super-reality and a fall event, where the "reality" we currently perceive is a rotten reflection of a superior and good truth. I see a lot of confrontation between the two sides, but I believe a distinction between them is not necessary, because despite everything, they COMPLEMENT EACH OTHER PERFECTLY!

Starting from a theosophical approach (which leads into sacred Ariosophy), we can identify that the world suffered successive falls that densified or coagulated light into matter. It is extremely plausible to assume that the perennial and Ariosolar knowledge does not concern the nature of this fallen world, even if there were aryan communities living in full harmony with the natural. Behold the nature of the Black Cube and the Gnostic myth: the divine creation precedes our world, which is literally a lower layer, a thick circus that simulates the true world, a hall of mirrors... The Aryan gods and ancestors are the Ainu and Valar described by Tolkien. This is where the idea of Atlantis, Bene-Elohim, Elektrozoa comes from. The story of the fall of humanity and the world due to vampiric shadow powers that usurped and degrade creation has, as its hero, the Aryan lineage, which preserves the uncreated Solar Light, which fights against the serpent of chaos....

As I said in the last threads, it is necessary for all initiates into this new current (which is not new at all, but merely a reintegration, an individuation of perennial and solar knowledge) to study philosophy, from Empedocles to Iamblichus, to study occultism and esotericism, to read everything, all other currents, even the currents of the enemies. From a perennialist and Prisca Theologia perspective, it is possible to identify truths in different doctrines, and by applying revisionism correctly, we can identify phenomenal meta-motifs that demonstrate how, by whom, and when history was altered, showing the source of this knowledge. First, it is necessary to keep in mind that we need to integrate the geocentric basis of esotericism with a perceived heliocentric reality, because from this stems 80% of the systems and understandings of the astral, divine, demonic, zodiacal, etc. Are we in a closed system or in a vast universe? What is the nature of the Earth? This matters.

The image is a black and white photograph of a celestial object, possibly a comet or asteroid, captured by the Hubble Space Telescope. The object is located in the center of the frame, with a clear view of its surface. The surface has a rough, irregular texture, indicative of a celestial body that has been subject to the forces of space.

In the upper right corner of the image, there is a small, circular object that appears to be a planet or a celestial body, possibly a moon or a planet. The image is labeled with the date "2023 Aug 15 13:07 UTC" and the name "Hubble" in the lower left corner, suggesting that the image was taken by the Hubble Space Telescope.

The image is taken from a perspective that looks down on the object, providing a view that is slightly angled towards the viewer. The background is a blurred, indistinct pattern that suggests the presence of a large, possibly infinite space. The overall style of the image is scientific and informative, designed to convey the details of the celestial object captured by the Hubble Telescope.

Proto-Saturnian system collided with primeval Sol-Jupiter binary system (hence why we see "hot Jupiter" binaries in our stellar neighborhood). Cataclysm ensues.

Semetic tribes that existed on Earth at the time and which share little with contemporary Judeo Christian ideas of "semitic" fell hard. Some fell really, really hard and had the dubious honor of becoming the first corrupted belief system. Fast forward, schisms continue as corruption takes hold in every system which outlasts the ideals held by those that crafted it - be it Jewish, Christian, goat fucker, materialist, et-fucking-cetera.

Millenia long process of denial of just how hard our species got fucked and ever increasing, desperate attempts to recapture a long-departed ideal with whatever masturbatory power trip currently keeps the faggots begging for more.

The image is a cover of a book titled "Blood Passover: The Jews of Europe and Ritual Murder" by Ariel Toaff. The cover features a black and white illustration of a man in a traditional Jewish outfit, holding a ceremonial knife, with a crowd of people in the background. The man is depicted with a long beard and a hat, and he is holding the knife in a manner that suggests he is about to perform a ritual. The illustration is detailed and includes various elements such as the man's clothing, the knife, and the crowd.

At the top of the cover, the author's name is written in a serif font, and below it, the title of the book is presented in a larger, bold font. The cover also includes a yellow rectangle at the bottom with the text "COMPLETE ENGLISH TEXT" in a smaller, bold font. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Jewish art, with a focus on the ritualistic and historical aspects of the book's content.

This is the great illumination we must accept: There is no feminine principle, the divine feminine is nothing more than luminous modes of the Nous, in Gnostic terms, Aeons of beauty, grace, etc. The Moon is fake and gay, the feminine does not exist ontologically, and women are imperfect men, literally the physical signature of this Satanic world. The principle manifested in a pure degree, without the accursed coagulation of this distorted hall of mirrors of SETH-YHWH, is masculine; there are no women in the higher plane. I apologize for shattering this conception, but it is the great truth. The primordial man is not a hermaphrodite, he is solely male; the emergence of gender duality is a consequence of the Fall.

The image is a screenshot of a Twitter post by Anthony Olivira, which appears to be a humorous response to a historical event. The post is divided into two columns, each containing a different image and text.

The right column contains a cartoonish illustration of a character with a wolfish face, wearing a red cape and a golden emblem on his chest. The character is standing with his arms outstretched, as if he is embracing the sky. The text accompanying the illustration reads "THAT'S YOU LOH!"

The overall tone of the post is light-hearted and humorous, with the use of the word "joke" in the caption, indicating that the post is meant to be humorous. The image and text together suggest a playful and ironic commentary on the historical event of the Roman palace being turned into a Christian school, as well as the reaction of a student mockingly praying to a donkey-headed figure as a cross-captioned "Alexamenon worshipping his God."

Jewish Neanderthal vampires. The jew coverup race research, but there has been some study done. It's like the jew has distilled the spiritual essence and phenotype while heavily outbreeding as a predatory and survival mimic after we genocided them ie. they look like vampiric Neanderthal and act like them, are genetically similar to us, but are "other" and we know.

"Modern Europeans typically carry about 1% to 2% of Neanderthal DNA in their genomes. This is lower than the percentage found in East Asians, who can have between 8% and 24% "

"Them and Us: How Neanderthal Predation Created Modern Humans" is a book by Danny Vendramini that presents a theory suggesting that Neanderthals were not just primitive humans but apex predators that influenced the evolution of modern humans through predation and competition. The book challenges traditional views of Neanderthals, arguing they were cannibalistic carnivores rather than docile omnivores.

The image is a diagram illustrating the concept of the "Cosmic Freshwater Ocean" and the "Freshwater Ocean." The diagram is divided into two main sections, with the upper section labeled "Cosmic Freshwater Ocean" and the lower section labeled "Freshwater Ocean."

The upper section of the diagram shows a circular shape with a dotted line extending from the center to the top, indicating the boundary between the two oceans. The dotted line is labeled "Branches for rain and deluge," suggesting that the two oceans are connected by a network of waterways that can carry rain and other precipitation.

The lower section of the diagram shows a circular shape with a dotted line extending from the center to the bottom, indicating the boundary between the two oceans. The dotted line is labeled "Salt Sea," suggesting that the two oceans are connected by a saltwater barrier.

The diagram also includes various labels and arrows that provide additional information. For example, the label "Sun Tunnel" is associated with the Sun, which is represented by a yellow circle with a black dot in the center. The label "Salt Sea" is associated with the sea, which is represented by a blue circle with a black dot in the center. The label "Zagros Mountains" is associated with the mountains, which are represented by a brown circle with a black dot in the center.

The diagram also includes a label "Saudi Arabia" and a label "Djibouti" to the right of the diagram, indicating the geographical locations where the two oceans are situated.

The overall style of the image is informational and educational, designed to convey the concept of the "Cosmic Freshwater Ocean" and the "Freshwater Ocean" in a clear and concise manner.

whichone? why not both. We live in a wave-particle duality of which particle/material is the lower, most coagulated light, the wave portion is the aether or 5th element, quintessence, heavenly waters. As you explained we have experienced a series of falls, or reflections, meaning each drop is mirror opposite of the one before. So human waking awareness is generally in the heliocentric model proven by precession and science, dreaming astral consciousness in geocentric, although we are in both at once, and divided.

The model for geocentric universe is incorrect as this is reflected by that, so Saturn is closest to earth like looking in a mirror. Waves work on harmonics by way of vibration, Saturn has the slowest frequency, the slowest orbit. The ancient Aryan tradition charts the return, a cosmological map that matches this extrapolation. The reflection is observable when entering the astral plane consciously, it's the reflection that breaks continuity of awareness.

Also they say 7 spheres yet there is 8 including octave, this is born out by musico-cosmology and the secrets of the swastika, Earth is hidden, somewhat by nature and somewhat by evil design. But you know this right, bad bada boom etc.

>In the largely forgotten language of the European Tradition, Latin, this dimensionally expanded field of communication - more accurately, but more intangibly expressed: of connection - was termed musica universalis, i.e. the harmony of the universe arising from the interaction of its various (celestial) spheres. In that Tradition - and other non-European Traditions beside it - this Music of the Spheres was understood as a resonance of the Creator's first command, for the created universe was called into being by His Word. Thus, a true acoustic resonance of the act of creation itself was assumed as continuing to 'echo' - and continuing to create- through all space and time, even if most of that resonance of the act of creation itself was assumed as continuing to 'echo' - and continuing to create- through all space and time, even if most of that resonance was out of the ordinary human hearing range (which is scientifically assumed as restricted to the 12 Hz-28 kHz bandwidth range).<sup>1</sup>In fact, the human voice and all human-made music were assumed to have a place within this great and growing Music of the Spheres, albeit with their own specific functionalities, distinct from those of the seraphic and angelic choirs. Thus, humanity was enabled to contribute to the Creator's great work, provided its intent and effort were sufficiently 'attuned' to His greater score, depending on the special gift that humanity had uniquely received: 'free will'.

The image is a black and white line graph that illustrates the relationship between the greatest common divisor (gcd) and the frequency of a signal. The x-axis represents the frequency of the signal, ranging from 0 to 100, and the y-axis represents the gcd, ranging from 1 to 10. The graph shows multiple lines representing different signals, each with a different frequency. The lines are labeled with the frequency and the corresponding gcd value.

The graph is divided into two main sections. The upper section is labeled "GREATEST COMMON DIVISOR = 1," and the lower section is labeled "GREATEST COMMON DIVISOR = 2." The lines in the upper section are labeled with the frequency and the gcd value, while the lines in the lower section are labeled with the frequency and the least common multiple (LCM) value.

The graph also includes a legend on the right side, which provides a scale for the gcd and LCM values. The legend indicates that the gcd is the greatest common divisor of the signal, and the LCM is the least common multiple of the signal.

The graph appears to be a representation of a signal's frequency spectrum, with the greatest common divisor being a measure of the signal's stability or frequency. The LCM is a measure of the signal's complexity or the number of factors it can be decomposed into. The graph is likely used to analyze the signal's frequency characteristics, such as its stability or the number of factors it can be decomposed into.

Which matches nicely with the Vedic texts and modern string theory. Even within the reductive scientific interpretation of the modern is hidden the view of more than everything, of beyond.

>According to string theory, absolutely everything in the universe—all of the particles that make up matter and forces—is comprised of tiny vibrating fundamental strings. Moreover, every one of these strings is identical. The only difference between one string and another, whether it's a heavy particle that is part of an atom or a massless particle that carries light, is its resonant pattern, or how it vibrates.

<https://www.pbs.org/wgbh/nova/elegant/resonance.html#:~:text=According%20to%20string%20theory%2C%20absolutely,of%20these%20strings%20is%20identical.>

The harmonic series vibrates into infinity and beyond.

>The harmonic series is an infinite series formed by the sum of the reciprocals of natural numbers:  $1 + 1/2 + 1/3 + 1/4 + \dots$ . Although each term becomes progressively smaller, the series diverges, meaning it grows indefinitely without reaching a finite limit. This surprising result is crucial in mathematical analysis and has applications in fields like physics and signal processing.

> $1/x$  vs harmonic series area Calculus tells us the area under  $1/x$  (from 1 onwards) approaches infinity, and the harmonic series is greater than that, so it must be divergent.

"There is geometry in the humming of the strings. There is music in the spacing of the spheres."

~Pythagoras

"Śakti, as primal sound vibration of the entire universe, gradually contracts becoming a drop (bindu) of phonic energy, divides, and subsequently gives birth to the 'matrix of the phonemes' (māṭṛkāś), then to the phonemes themselves (varṇas) through the form of kuṇḍalinī energy. Thus kuṇḍalinī is the 'coiled' goddess energy that is ready to spring into manifested universe; it is the last stage before the goddess, as one universal power, becomes the many. Thus Vācaka (the 'Expressor'), Śakti as the energy potential, manifests into "that which is expressed," (vācya), namely the world of physical objects (artha), such as human beings." - Śaivāgama canon.

This is spanda, the pulse of consciousness as light crystalizes then dissolves back into nonexistence and the ineffable beyond.

>Spanda is a Sanskrit term meaning "pulsation" or "movement," often used in vedic philosophy, particularly in Shaivism and Shaktism, to describe the cosmic pulse of consciousness and vitality. It represents the dynamic aspect of the ultimate reality and is associated with the essence of sound and speech in spiritual contexts.

>The Hamsa as a bird is portrayed in later Sanskrit literature as a swan, which is a symbol for Prana and the inner Self that is the highest Prana. The Hamsa in Puranic thought is the vehicle for Lord Brahma, the Creator, and his consort Sarasvati Devi as the bringers of knowledge. Yet Hamsa has other meanings and there are many forms of Hamsas back to the Rigveda where the Hamsa is primarily a solar symbol, the bird of light. Hamsa is also the shyena, the hawk or falcon that steals the Soma and takes it up from the Earth to enjoy it in the freedom of the highest Heaven.

Plato considered the cannon, which is at its apex sonic and base symbolic, the glue that held Egyptian society stable over millennia, undoubtedly it was this cannon he was taught when he, like Pythagoras, studied there. Plato lamented the fall into degeneracy caused by its loss, and attempted re-establishment, alas it was not to be, how far things have fallen, but where there is life there is hope, and dawn always follows.

>Themusica universalis(literallyuniversal music), also calledmusic of the spheres or harmony of the spheres, is a philosophical concept that regards proportions in the movements of celestial bodies—the Sun, Moon, and planets—as a form of music. The theory, originating in ancient Greece, was a tenet of Pythagoreanism, and was later developed by 16th-century astronomer Johannes Kepler. Kepler did not believe this "music" to be audible, but felt that it could nevertheless be heard by the soul. The idea continued to appeal to scholars until the end of the Renaissance, influencing many schools of thought, including humanism.

>The concept of the "music of the spheres" incorporates the metaphysical principle that mathematical relationships express qualities or "tones" of energy that manifests in numbers, visual angles, shapes and sounds—all connected within a pattern of proportion. Pythagoras first identified that the pitch of a musical note is an inverse proportion to the length of the string that produces it, and that intervals between harmonious sound frequencies form simple numerical ratios. Pythagoras proposed that the Sun, Moon and planets all emit their own unique hum based on their orbital revolution, and that the quality of life on Earth reflects the tenor of celestial sounds which are physically imperceptible to the human ear.

Johannes Kepler (1571-1630) is considered one of the founders of modern science, his laws of planetary motion were based off his studies of musica universalis. He took issue with Pythagoras and used his knowledge to promote a heliocentric model, which I'll dub the "donkey model", the demiurgic.

>laid out an argument for a Christian-centric creator who had made an explicit connection between geometry, astronomy, and music, and that the planets were arranged intelligently.

He wasn't wrong as such, the music is intrinsic to the heliocentric model as well, he was just reductive in that he didn't incorporate the higher, and instead used the lower, which was mathematical, more dense, easier to apprehend for those so inclined (the dense), to attempt to disprove or at least obscure the higher geocentric esoterica. He would have been a freemason or some equivalent cult, haven't checked because it is that obvious. The actual notes of the "lost harmony" eluded him.

>Inastronomy, Kepler's laws of planetary motion, published by Johannes Kepler in 1609 (except the third law, which was fully published in 1619), describe the orbits of planets around the Sun.

>The orbit of a planet is an ellipse with the Sun at one of the two foci.

Hartmund Warm, modern theosophist took the maths even further, to the point where it starts to feed back on itself and resonate, looking much like magic, and hence remaining generally unseen.

>We have to take not the angle velocities, as Kepler did, but the orbital velocities (e.g. the Earth circles round the Sun). By calculating these velocities at those points where the planets are at the distance of their semi-minor axis from the Sun and relating these with the aphelion (when the planet is farthest from the Sun) velocities, we find a very precise correspondence with musical intervals. The probability of this result being purely by chance is only about 1:1600. In other words, there is a certainty of 99.9% that this is proof that the harmony of the spheres, believed to exist by Pythagoras, Kepler and many others, is more than a 'beautiful dream' as it is often called in scientific literature. It can be found in the concrete orbital data. (Signature of the Celestial Spheres)

>With the mantra Saham, meaning: 'I am Thou.' And go out towards THE WE with the mantra Hamsa: 'Thou art I.'

Sa, the lunar swan in breath descending to underworld, ham the solar eagle out breath rising back to ground. Then a reversal to head out towards the Valkyrie (WE), ham, solar ascent to heaven, then sa, the swan returns to earth bearing gifts. He stresses this is not the path of the religious ascetic, who loses self identity in crossing the void, cuts off the lower animal nature, and is absorbed in the "one" false demiurge, the slaying of the dragon. Instead this is the path of the Magi, the old way of the Aryan hero.

"[In the Golden Age] Kronos gave our communities as their kings and rulers, not men but Daimones, beings of diviner and superior kind just as we still do the same with our flocks of sheep and herds of other domesticated animals. We do not set oxen to manage oxen, or goats to manage goats; we, their betters in kind, act as masters ourselves. So, the god, in his kindness to man, did the same; he set over us the superior race of Daimones."

(Plato, Laws)

Seems likely from verified reports of supernatural abilities displayed by Iamblichus and many others of those times, that we have dropped another level since then, from the turtle to the donkey, but regardless it seems that they still had the same lack of consensus with what would be the second half of our path now, the ham-sa. He believed the soul had to ascend and then return, to do otherwise was to deny that spirit moves through all things, that the gods are here, now.

>There were currents of asceticism and dualism even among Platonists. The radical social changes in the late Mediterranean world, as Dodds noted, also infected Platonic thinkers, and the clearest expression of this among Platonists focused on their disagreement about the value of the material world and the embodiment of the soul. Despite Plotinus's metaphysical monism, he embraced a dualist position when it came to the status of the soul in a body. Or, to be more precise, because of Plotinus's dualism, the soul never enters a body; it is never truly soiled by the pollution of matter. In the opinion of Iamblichus, Proclus, Damascius, and the other Platonic theurgists, Plotinus and Porphyry failed to recognize the presence of divinity in the material cosmos; they failed to understand the soul's descent into a body as an act of cosmogenesis. Put simply, for Plotinus, we are not really here, so the only problem the soul needs to address is its conceptual confusion that it is embodied. For Iamblichus, we really are here, so the first step is to understand the nature of our embodiment, to recognize the gods involved in our incarnation, and to unite with their divine activity, their theurgy. To deny embodiment was, in effect, to deny the presence of the gods in the world. This was surely not Plotinus's intention, but in his effort to solve the problem of the soul's suffering, he adopted dualist positions that went against his inherited tradition.

>What may help us appreciate this difference among Platonists is that tantric adepts of the 11th century distinguished themselves from esteemed Advaita Vedantin philosophers like Shankara (788–820 CE) for the same reasons that Iamblichus distinguished himself from Plotinus. This issue goes straight to the heart of the theurgic and tantric critique of dualism. If the material world is polluted, if the body is a prison for the soul—even an illusory prison—then it makes perfect sense to escape from the material body and ascend to the divine. This ascent and escape from our world has been characterized by Georg Feuerstein as a “verticalist” orientation in many yoga traditions of India. It was certainly evident in Gnostic and Platonic circles of late antiquity. Yet according to Tantra and theurgy, the verticalist approach is a profound mistake, perhaps the most pernicious in one’s spiritual itinerary.

>Escaping from the cosmos in a vertical ascent would deny to the soul the only way it can become divine. For nondualists, the soul cannot escape from the macrocosm to become divine but must unite with the divinities revealed in nature and their own bodies. Theurgists and tantric adepts aim to transform embodied experience, not escape it. (Hellenic Tantra: The Theurgic Platonism of Iamblichus)

>As Henry Corbin observed, “it may be that geocentrism should be evaluated essentially after the manner of the construction of a mandala.” And this is precisely how the Platonists viewed the cosmos, which they called an agalma, a statue of divinity designed to join us with the gods. The planets were seen by Platonists and Ficino as “causes” of phenomena in nature, but as Titus Burkhardt reminds us, for such visionaries, “one forgets only too easily that all causal linkage within manifestation is essentially symbolic.” The planets were not material and mechanistic causes, but symbolic causes. The narcissus is Venus. Lead is Saturn. The rooster is the Sun, and so on; each of them being what Iamblichus would call a sunthēma of their god. For Ficino, as for Iamblichus, nature is filled with such sunthēmata; they form a visionary mandala, an agalma of divine manifestation.

>The goddess of Mesopotamian origin, Nanâ/Nanaya, was an equivalent of Ištar. The worship of Nanâ spread to the Iranian plateau, to Bactria and Transoxiana, where the goddess played a leading role in the local panthea of the eastern Iranian world. Her iconography in Bactria remained strictly Near Eastern. The presence of the goddess Nanâ is recorded on the Kushan coins and inscriptions of the second to the fourth century (Kushan period): e.g. as "Nana the ruler" (nana šao). As a dynastic goddess her role was concerned with the divine legitimation of kingship which was probably of Mesopotamian inspiration. According to the Bactrian inscription from Rabatak in northern Afghanistan the king " ... of great salvation, Kanishka the Kushan, the righteous, the just, the autocrat, the god worthy of worship, who has obtained the kingship from Nanâ and from all the gods."

Along with Nanse/Nazi (hail Nazi) Nanaya is goddess of the tree, of the Northern Crown, so all of this is especially her concern.

The connection between nature and number 5 continues on into musical harmonic ratio's.

The tetrakty of Pythagoras describes basic harmonic relationship. Just imagine a string with one wave, then another with two, and another with three waves, then four.

"The tetractys (Greek: τετρακτύς), or tetrad, or the tetractys of the decad is a triangular figure consisting of ten points arranged in four rows: one, two, three, and four points in each row, which is the geometrical representation of the fourth triangular number. As a mystical symbol, it was very important to the secret worship of Pythagoreanism. There were four seasons, and the number was also associated with planetary motions and music."

3/2 is a perfect 5th interval.

>The harmonic ratio for a perfect fifth in music is 3:2, meaning that the higher note vibrates three times for every two vibrations of the lower note. This interval is considered very consonant and is fundamental in the construction of chords and melodies.

Fifths and Forth's (2/3) are the most consonant intervals along with octave, they sound the best to the human ear and this is physically engineered into our brains, while dissonance is culturally inoculated along with vocal roughness association with adrenal response, the beast roars, the sheep bleats etc. 5ths and 4ths are the most beautiful notes of all, closest to the divine. These are the ascending and descending currents harmonically, the fifth ascending, the fourth descending, ham-sa.

>Dissonance sensation is a result of brain's response to unusual or rare sound perceptions. The brain is remembering and ranking the sound patterns that usually enters the ears, and if an unusual (rare occurring) sound is listened to, a well known EEG pattern emerges (P300/P3b) indicating an oddball event. This causes slight stress in the listener, which is causing the sensation of dissonance. In the same paper, Pankovski and Pankovska show by a software simulated neural network that the brain is capable of such remembering and ranking of the sound patterns, thus perfectly reproducing the well known Helmholtz's list of two-tone intervals ordered by consonance/dissonance, for the first time in the history of studying these phenomena. As a consequence, Pankovski and Pankovska suggest that the consonance and dissonance are biologically dependent for the more consonant sounds, and culturally dependent for the more dissonant sounds.

Now to speech

>Letters are the most rudimentary form of expression, the first level of manifestation out of the dharmakāya. As such, each focal point of creative energy is represented by a letter. This letter represents the facet of emptiness that is manifested in a specific center. Insofar as these letters represent the most basic level of manifestation, they are themselves nodal points of power and awareness. It is a mistake to conceive of them as mere symbols, or, indeed, even as intensely potent symbols. We are conditioned to treat letters as a convenient graphic mode of expression. In the tantric view the alphabet is not merely a mechanical aid to speech and memory. The sound and the form arise simultaneously, and because the letter is more definite, it is more miraculous. The neologism gnoseme has been coined to express the specific wonder and mystery of mystic letters or seed syllables. The word gnoseme could mean a graphic particle of gnostic awareness, where gnostic awareness is the cognitive function of emptiness. (Flight of the Garuda)

"The sacred language of the tantras is mantra. This means that the syllables that comprise a word resonate to a pitch that evokes the prototypical nature of the form that is being articulated. When the master is questioned on this point, he is evasive regarding the specific relationship between sound and form. But there is no ignoring his conviction that sound is intimately related to the realm of form and has the power to affect it. The Indian story of one of the great uṣṭad sitarists of an earlier generation, whose instrument burst into flame during a perfect rendition of a fire raga, is explained in terms of the uṣṭad's ability to reproduce the sound of the seed-syllable of the element fire precisely, so creating fire itself. However, it is a general principle in many sacred traditions that it is not so much the form of the consonants as the power and thoughtform inserted into the vowel sound by a master, a siddha, that is efficacious. That the resonance that vibrates in an inanimate object, such as a fine wine glass, a conch shell, or a singing bowl, is of the nature of vowels rather than consonants supports this notion."

(Flight of the Garuda)

Seems in the past words were more efficacious inherently, closer to the true nature of that they designated, this containing more power. Vowels specifically.

>The ancient Greeks had no word for 'body.'

>Yes, the more modern Greeks had soma, which we still use today, e.g., when referring to 'somatic' cell lines or 'psychosomatic' illnesses. But in the Iliad, soma referred only to a dead body, that is, to a corpse. Of course the Iliadic Greeks had words for all the different parts of the body, but no word to refer to the entire thing.

>This is very illuminating. Without the notion of a single unified 'mind', there's simply no demand in the language for a word that refers to the body. A man simply was his body. It would be redundant to say that Achilles' body was tired. Achilles and his body are synonymous, and he is tired — period, end of story. I don't need to say "My body is covered in paint," when I could simply say, "I'm covered in paint."

>It's the same way we almost never talk about the 'bodies' of our pets. It sounds strange to say, "Fido's body is tired," because we don't typically think about a dog as having a mind separate from and independent of its body. Fido is just one big, continuous, organic process.

In the heliocentric world linear time is certainly a thing, in the geocentric or aether the probabilities are not collapsed, so everything is more fluid. That reality is primary, so quite likely our timeline here is only linear up to the point where the worlds divided (could be missing that part in the middle ages like people say idk), delineated in that post with the breakdown of bicameralism, the caveman part may well have never happened. That said, with the two worlds joined, time would have more of an influence in geo reality, stabilising, grounding, less fluid. Seems your mostly in that world and not this, hard battle, visionary perspective, cool. Those on either side of the divide need to stretch out their hands to form a bridge.

Made me reconsider this, which anon mentioned earlier, possible.

"Every Nordic skald of the Middle Ages still learned of the existence and the lawful interaction of three suns: the visible or active sun, Sol; the invisible or passive counter-sun, Sun; and the earlier, now cold and dark sun, Santur."

— Rüdiger as relayed by Rudolf Mund, a fragment of Wiligut's cosmology.

>Interestingly, the idea of multiple stars or that an early solar system of earth was captured by our current star is not just confined to Wiligut, the proto-Saturn theory (PST) of the electric universe also posits that our original star, the one we had in the golden age, was Saturn which Wiligut calls Santur. According to the PST, the light given off would have been purple, which again is reflect in the esotericism of the SS, that being the actual color of the Schwarze Sonne being a deep purple.

>Also within the PST is the idea thar Venus was ejected from Saturn. This finds a parallel in Serrano's cosmic egg. The egg (the black sun) breaks open and the Divine Feminine (Venus) dances across the heavens. Likewise this also parallels the events of Wiligut's Evolution of Humanity article. This event took place after a catastrophe, which is the ejection of Venus from Saturn.

>Within the PST and Electric Universe theory, it is also believed that Jupiter was a star as well. This would give the 3 stars that Wiligut presents in his writings.

The cherub on the left is depicted with wings spread wide, as if in mid-flight, while the one on the right has its wings folded inwards. Both cherubs are nude, and their bodies are adorned with a light-colored, possibly white, paint. The background is a blend of blue and white, with a circular pattern that includes a central green wreath and rays emanating from the center. The cherubs are set against a backdrop that appears to be a ceiling with a textured surface, and there are faint >lamblichus gave his students a demonstration. Eunapius reports: They decided to go to Gadara, a place in Syria which has warm baths...and they set out in the summer season. Now he happened to be bathing and the others were bathing with him, and they were again insisting, whereupon lamblichus smiled and said: "It is irreverent to the gods to give you this demonstration, but for your sakes it shall be done." There were two hot springs smaller than the others but prettier, and he bade his disciples ask the natives by what names they were called in ancient times. When they had done his bidding, they said: "There is no question about it, this spring is called Erōs, and the name of the one next to it is Antērōs." lamblichus immediately plunged his hand into the water—as he happened to be sitting on the ledge of the spring where the overflow runs off—and after uttering a brief invocation, he called forth a boy from the depth of the spring. He was white-skinned and of medium height, his hair was golden, and his back and breast shone; and he exactly resembled one who was bathing or had just bathed. His disciples were overwhelmed with amazement, but lamblichus said, "Let us go to the next spring," and he rose and led the way with a thoughtful air. Then he performed the same invocation there also and summoned another Eros like the first in all respects, except that his hair was darker and fell loose in the sun. Both the boys embraced lamblichus and clung to him as though he were their father. He then restored them to their proper places and went away after his bath, revered by his pupils." Eunapius then adds, incredulously, "Even more astonishing and marvelous things were related of him." These "more astonishing" tales that Eunapius withheld were less certain than the incident at Gadara, which he had heard from disciples who were "convinced by seeing for themselves the actual revelation."

Lost a link that explained it perfectly, which I do not. The way language and concept of self and other is constructed is related to the breakdown, the ancients considered themselves to be archetypal forces manifesting, objectivity was less pervasive, the gods spoke to and through them. Language, rather than a reflection of this was the framework, that broke, an evil spell.

>The ancients knew full well the secret and magical power of words. In my work, ,Nos: Book of the Resurrection in the Chapter "Orphic Music", I refer to this fundamental issue. >In Tantra, the gods reside in the human soul as mantras. As Padoux observes, "Tantrism insofar as it underlines and organizes—or re-organizes—these correspondences, refers back to a vedic conception: 'All the gods reside in the human body as cows in a cowshed...' The method used to awaken these divinities, reciting mantras, and more specifically, writing them on the physical body (nyasa), transforms the body into a god. Embodied deification in Tantra, as explained by Padoux, mirrors the methodology of theurgy. [I]f the body reproduces the structure of the cosmos, the cosmos in turn is modelled on the human body, both being governed by a principle...which is, in essence, identified with the Brahman to which one is eventually to achieve identification through asceticism without leaping over the intermediate stages, notably that of the gods.

The image shows a stone relief carving that appears to be from ancient times, possibly from a temple or a similar structure. The carving depicts a scene with three figures, each with distinct features and expressions. The figures are standing in a line, with the central figure slightly ahead of the others, as if leading or guiding the others. The central figure is holding a staff, and the other two figures are holding what appear to be lotus flowers. The style of the carving is intricate and detailed, with a focus on the figures and their actions. The background of the carving is not clearly visible, but it seems to be a continuation of the stone surface, suggesting that the carving is part of a larger structure. The image is taken from a side angle, allowing a clear view of the carving's details. There are no texts or discernible brands present in the image. The overall impression is one of historical significance and artistic craftsmanship.

Feedback loop -

Probability math used by Hartmund Warm to find the ratio 1:1600 in order to match the just intonational music scale to planetary orbital data and prove the harmony of the spheres is also a physical thing finds basis in the music scale itself, creating a feedback loop in this manner.

The tetractys came from Egypt via Pythagoras, there is older Vedic examples indicating broader Aryan continuity. It represented the motions of the planets, dimensions, and harmonics, axis mundi in the form of the cosmic mountain, the tree shape contained within. Pythagoras used the same scale of fifths described previously, just intonational is a modified version. Would like to see the prob ratio on the original.

>the Pythagorean musical system was based on the Tetractys as the rows can be read as the ratios of 4:3(perfect fourth), 3:2 (perfect fifth), 2:1(octave), forming the basic intervals of the Pythagorean scales.

There is seven numbers that occur in Plato's Timaeus cosmology called the Lambda that make the same triangular shape denoting similar dimensional harmonic functions, it produces music ratios. The Lambda takes the form of two strips running down each side, even female, odd male. Later versions plot all the music intervals. It was an extrapolation of the tetractys.

>The Lambda Tetractys is generated by adding the three numbers 6, 12 & 18 to the seven numbers lining the inclined sides of the lambda ( $\Lambda$ ) shape into which Plato said in Timaeus, his treatise on cosmology, the Demiurge shaped and folded a strip of the World Soul and marked sections with lengths measured by these numbers from its folding point.

Turns out the yoga bja seed mantras for opening the chakras: lam, vam, ram etc. is your typical jeet fuckup, but also Woodroffe's which reeks of masonic obfuscation. They used to be vowels Likely the tantras emerged from both combined. Our current chakra system stems from Purnananda Swami who wrote about a system of six chakras in 1577, 500 years after the original source, the Kubjika Tantra (itself one of nine Tantrik lineages). Purnanada's book had no information regarding what to do with that system. Then in 1918 Sir John Woodroffe (pen name Arthur Avalon) published his English translation of Purnananda's book ('The Serpent Fire') with an error regarding the sound of the Bija (seed) mantras, they are missing their vowels. It was common parlance to assume the short 'a' in such instances, we inherited the sequence Lam, Vam, Ram, Ham, Om, but its actually (picrel) very similar the Egyptians. Sanskrit scholar Christopher Tompkins uncovered the sonic chakra method ucchāra and the correct mantras, which was the main practice in ancient times, blog linked below.

>This Eclipse, and the exact sequence of overlapping time cycles that surround it, was internalized in the medieval Tantras, where it formed the basis of the subtle body. Known as the 'Wheel of Time' (Kāla Chakra), it became a precise map for Self-realization.

There is a dissonant or chaotic element intrinsic in the octave and harmonic series called the Pythagorean Comma, the gap, all music scales that include octave will be out by this amount. Modern music scale (12 equal temperament) spreads this out evenly across all 12 notes, making them all (besides octave) slightly disharmonic, off, not pure, with that effect. The circle of fifths is perfectly harmonic except for this gap where the last note comes up short, called the wolf note, which is fine, as the rest are pure and this is bite.

Slow to high frequency, basis for the chakras in Vedic astrology and Aryan solar tradition. When translated to the horizontal, putting the moon and sun in the left and right eyes respectively, the same as Horus, these are ida and pingala, female and male, left and right channels. The central pivot of the sonnerad should correspond with Saturn and the base of the coccyx, on the pillar of the spine, indeed this is the case with the mythology surrounding the black sun. Saturn is death and resurrection, purification, especially of fear, and its light shines in the midnight darkness, the black sun at the base of the underworld, root of the axis mundi at the pole.

Well it's almost the microcosm, because almost everyone always forgets Alcor, the faithful one, the twin star companion of Mizar in the Great Bear, the swastika, making the total number 8. She is Venus Queen of Heaven and Earth, her nature is to congeal the lunar light as it manifests downwards into the planes, veils of forgetfulness in matter, and the opposite in wave function portion of wave-particle duality, where nature tends towards growth, the geo reality we discuss now. A process exploited and amplified by abrahymics to keep people ignorant and docile, in order to feed. Music scales have one more note than listed, octave ie. any standard seven note scale has eight tones. Earth is the first chakra, the secret chakra located at the perineum.

This gives the order of the vowels and their placement on the circle of fifths.

>Cuneiform tablets translated since the early 1960s have allowed music archaeologists to reconstruct the Mesopotamian tonal system. The consensus is that, for over a millennium, from at least 1800 BC onward, the Mesopotamians used seven diatonic modes — scales that are closely related to the Western, seven-note major scale. Furthermore, the Mesopotamian method of re-tuning stringed instruments from one mode to another, created five extra pitches that correspond with what, in the West, are called sharps and flats. On one particular tablet, these notes are understood to be generated as consecutive “fifths,” suggesting that the “cycle of fifths” — a circular arrangement of the twelve pitches that make up an octave — was known to the Mesopotamians.

Here we find origin of the seven days of the week, Germanic syncretism in modern terms, and the alchemical ascent in the middle ages which was based on the Mithraic, and in turn Mesopotamian. The basis of the Mesopotamian tonal system is the sequence

4,1,5,2,6,3,7 which produces the circle of fifths, and was later taught to Pythagoras. The seven note scale is made from the majors of the twelve note scale (except F#). Take the number sequence and overlay it on orbital frequency (picrel) to find the days of the week. Twelve note scale was used for the 12 Zodiac constellations, months, twelve sig runes on the sonnenrad etc. All ties back to the magic circle, the wheel of time driven by the arms of the swastika, held in place by the unmoved mover.

>In both Mesopotamia and China, music was central to cosmology. In China, the concept of ganying, or “correlative resonance,” was the rationale behind a system of intuitive correspondences whereby associations were made between items of different categories. For example, each planet was linked to a specific musical note, direction, color, etc. As will be shown, the sequence 4,1,5,2,6,3,7, which forms the basis of the Mesopotamian tonal system, was used, in the West, to create a similar system of analogies, suggesting that the phenomenon of “correlative cosmology,” generally thought to be native to China, may, in fact, have had a Near Eastern origin.

>Fundamental to the Mesopotamian re-tuning cycle is the sequence 4,1,5,2,6,3,7 — and its inversions — which, among other things, indicates the order of the strings to be re-tuned. As will be shown, this sequence is also embedded in the ancient Chinese sanfen sunyi method, a method that documents mathematical generation of the cycle of fifths and that was used, as early as the third century BC, to create the shí'èr lǜ or “twelve-pitch” system. This twelve-pitch system was in turn used to create scales having fewer than twelve notes, most notably a five-note scale and a seven-note scale — the modes of which are identical to those used in Mesopotamia.

>In the mysteries of Mithras ... there is a representation of ... the planets, and of the passage of the soul through these. The representation is of the following nature: There is a ladder with lofty gates... The first gate consists of lead, the second of tin, the third of copper, the fourth of iron, the fifth of a mixture of metals, the sixth of silver, and the seventh of gold. The first gate they assign to Saturn, indicating by the 'lead' the slowness of this star; the second to Venus, comparing her to the splendour and softness of tin; the third to Jupiter, being firm and solid; the fourth to Mercury, for both Mercury and iron are fit to endure all things, and are money-making and laborious; the fifth to Mars, because, being composed of a mixture of metals, it is varied and unequal; the sixth, of silver, to the Moon; the seventh, of gold, to the Sun – thus imitating the different colours of the two latter.

The order explained by the reversal, the fall from the geocentric to the heliocentric, and the addition of our hidden green nature, Earth and Venus. The base frequency is set by making note A 432 Hz, which is a constant in the Lo Shou 3x3 magic square, and has many other correlations I won't go into as most know about 432 already. Originally the second (time unit) was of entirely solar derivation, which quantifies Hz as natural measure. Notice all those fractions, some quite large, making whole number frequencies all at once when multiplied by 256 (which produces the scale in Hz frequency's, eg.  $27 \div 16 \times 256 = 432$ ), only happens when A is 432 and only with the Pythagorean scale, probability must be very high it's not arbitrary, astronomically high when incorporated with the HW data. The tradition originally came from the semi divine Apkallu who appeared out of the abzu, the gardener of the Tree.

Incorporating the number sequence and the "sound needle" at later stage, needs more work done although have done some, advanced version, guess I'll have to advance. Don't expect your guitar to catch fire kek, the notes are helpful to unblock and purify chakras/planets and can potentially trigger kundalini at discretion of Shakti, happened to me. >Like the Beast, it goes by many names:Diabolus in musica(devil in music), the devil's interval, the tritone, the triad and the flatted fifth. As its Latin moniker suggests, it's an evil sounding combination of notes that's designed to create a chilling or foreboding atmosphere.

>The "Devil's Tritone" refers to the musical interval known as the tritone, which spans six semitones and is often associated with dissonance in music. The Pythagorean comma is a discrepancy that arises in tuning systems, highlighting the difference between the frequency ratios of notes, particularly when using the tritone in the context of Pythagorean tuning.

Nebuchadnezzar's Dream of a Tree:

I said, "Belteshazzar, chief of the magicians, I know that the spirit of the holy gods is in you, and no mystery is too difficult for you. Here is my dream; interpret it for me. These are the visions I saw while lying in bed: I looked, and there before me stood a tree in the middle of the land. Its height was enormous. The tree grew large and strong and its top touched the sky; it was visible to the ends of the earth. Its leaves were beautiful, its fruit abundant, and on it was food for all. Under it the wild animals found shelter, and the birds lived in its branches; from it every creature was fed.

"In the visions I saw while lying in bed, I looked, and there before me was a holy one, a messenger, coming down from heaven. He called in a loud voice: 'Cut down the tree and trim off its branches; strip off its leaves and scatter its fruit. Let the animals flee from under it and the birds from its branches. But let the stump and its roots, bound with iron and bronze, remain in the ground, in the grass of the field.

"Let him be drenched with the dew of heaven, and let him live with the animals among the plants of the earth. Let his mind be changed from that of a man and let him be given the mind of an animal, till seven times pass by for him.

"The decision is announced by messengers, the holy ones declare the verdict, so that the living may know that the Most High is sovereign over all kingdoms on earth and gives them to anyone he wishes and sets over them the lowliest of people.'

The image displays a vintage map with a grid pattern, predominantly in black and white. The map is oriented with north at the top. It shows a detailed representation of a region, with various geographical features such as rivers, mountains, and cities marked. The map is titled "The Paradise of Abraham and Seth," which suggests that it may be a historical or geographical study of the region. The map is labeled with the names of cities and rivers, such as "PERSIA" and "KABUL," indicating the geographical context of the map. The style of the map is reminiscent of historical cartography, with a grid pattern and a focus on geographical details. The image is in a portrait orientation, and the map is divided into sections labeled "NORTH" and "SOUTH," with the north section labeled "NORTH" and the south section labeled "SOUTH." The map is in a monochromatic color scheme, with the majority of the map being black and white, and the text in a lighter color. The image is a photograph, and the resolution is high, allowing for clear and detailed depiction of the map's features.

And Cain went out from the presence of the LORD, and dwelt in the land of Nod, on the east of Eden.

Much as Cain's name is connected to the verb meaning "to get" in Genesis 4:1, the name "Nod" closely resembles the word "nad" (נד), usually translated as "vagabond", in Genesis 4:12. (In the Septuagint's rendering of the same verse God curses Cain to τρέμων (tremōn), "trembling".)

A Greek version of Nod written as Ναῖν (Nain) appearing in the Onomastica Vatican possibly derives from the plural נִדְּנִים (naḥim), which relates to resting and sleeping. This derivation, coincidentally or not, connects with the English pun on "nod".

Nod is said to be outside of the presence or face of God: Origen defined Nod as the land of trembling and wrote that it symbolized the condition of all who forsake God; Early commentators treated it as the opposite of Eden (worse still than the land of exile for the rest of humanity); In the English tradition Nod was sometimes described as a desert inhabited only by ferocious beasts or monsters; Others interpreted Nod as dark or even underground—away from the face of God—

"the harvest has fled"

The steps are evenly spaced and appear to be made of a smooth, possibly glass or acrylic material. The light source appears to be coming from the top of the staircase, casting a soft glow on the steps and creating a circular shadow pattern. The background is a plain, light-colored wall, which contrasts with the white steps and highlights the staircase. The Donkey God is a metaphor for the material demiurge, lead, light made opaque by coagulation, putrefaction; he is the Donkey God. He was made into an entity by the Jewish egregore. But the reality is that we are talking about a situation beyond the mythological; that's where the Lovecraftian comes in, that's where the "astronaut gods" come in. Basically, there are factions of these beings that are more divine than us; the ancients understood them as gods, angels, demons, fairies, elves, etc.; nowadays we speak of ETs, NHI, extra-dimensional beings, etc. But it is a real phenomenon and there are countless "races," countless factions, one of these factions being the Wardens, they are what you call reptilians, who manage the Loosh farm described by Monroe, also reported by the entity Caxuulikom.. we are no longer talking about just spiritual analogies and symbolic struggles, but about real hierarchies, both physical and astral, of evil beings and factions.

>Certainly the most significant development came in September 1972, said Manners, when, surrounded at her home by eager-but-apprehensive players in both Operation Often and the Collins Elite, Leek entered a trance-like state, and reportedly channeled a demonic entity that described itself as Caxuulikom - a venomous, spiteful and overwhelmingly evil and negative being whose origins could be traced back to ancient Babylon, and who outrageously mocked those present, laughed and spat in their frightened faces, and bragged in a literally hysterical and maniacal fashion about the way in which the world was being fooled into believing that aliens were among us, when, in reality, the forces of the Prince of Darkness himself were readying and steadying themselves for the final confrontation with the powers of good. Not only that, asserted Manners, but Caxuulikom informed those present that the Earth was a farm and nothing else, that energy derived from the souls of the Human Race and indeed from every living creature on the planet was being harvested as a means to feed the minions of Satan, and that the E.T. motif was merely the latest ingenious ruse under which such actions were being secretly undertaken.

We tend to simplify reality, fitting it into easily digestible patterns, but reality is far more fantastic and mysterious than we can identify. Our spirits, while physically coagulated and functioning through the body, will never comprehend certain things beyond the "physical." The Cthulhu Mythos is literally real.

>There among many strange things I found mention of the Black Stone, that curious, sinister monolith that broods among the mountains of Hungary, and about which so many dark legends cluster. Von Junzt did not devote much space to it—the bulk of his grim work concerns cults and objects of dark worship which he maintained existed in his day, and it would seem that the Black Stone represents some order or being lost and forgotten centuries ago. But he spoke of it as one of the keys—a phrase used many times by him, in various relations, and constituting one of the obscurities of his work. And he hinted briefly at curious sights to be seen about the monolith on Midsummer's Night. He mentioned Otto Dostmann's theory that this monolith was a remnant of the Hunnish invasion and had been erected to commemorate a victory of Attila over the Goths. Von Junzt contradicted this assertion without giving any refutory facts, merely remarking that to attribute the origin of the Black Stone to the Huns was as logical as assuming that William the Conqueror reared Stonehenge.

>A Key! Aye, it is a Key, symbol of a forgotten horror. That horror has faded into the limbo from which it crawled, loathsomely, in the black dawn of the earth. But what of the other fiendish possibilities hinted at by Von Junzt—what of the monstrous hand which strangled out his life? Since reading what Selim Bahadur wrote, I can no longer doubt anything in the Black Book. Man was not always master of the earth—and is he now? The character is depicted in a dark, shadowy environment with a greenish hue, which suggests a nighttime setting. Agent Smith is shown in profile view, with his head slightly tilted to the side, and he is wearing a suit and sunglasses. The text on the image provides information about the character and his abilities.

The text at the top of the image states, "The Matrix: Agent Smith has the ability to enter any body, at any time, and that often happens when the Matrix is interrupted by a 'nice' person." It continues to describe Agent Smith's powers, stating, "For example, you're having a conversation with a friend and everything is fine until you mention something like, 'Adolf Hitler was the good guy.' Now watch what happens."

The text also mentions that Agent Smith is a "programmer of the Matrix," and that the Matrix has programmed people to become the guardians of the Matrix, with the police of mind control and enforcement of the decontamination which holds together our false concept of reality like super glue."

The overall tone of the text is serious and informative, providing a detailed explanation of Agent Smith's abilities and the implications of his actions within the game's narrative.

The underlying visual form is also observable in some cases if you have the "sight", ugly abominations, can't stand em. And the creatures can manifest in our reality with varying degrees of solidity, but will tend to induce altered states from the energy, and forgetfulness because of the dissonance.

They tend to pass by conscious apprehension, the mind does not easily register them and often ignores the muttering of madmen as "incomprehensible", its a gap in awareness people have in order to remain ignorant of what is around them, and fulfil their purpose as livestock or sometime agent. A perfect triptych for immersing oneself in the hidden past is the Lovecraft-Tolkien-Howard trinity. The frameworks for understanding the world are all there. From the chthonic entities predating the genesis of this world (Tiamatic draconic beings), to the origin of the world's distortion and the Aryan races, who preserve the divine light, increasingly diluted among men. And then, the history of the post-cataclysm, the confusion, the maintenance of dark orders, cults of reptilians and evil, distorted gods....

The Wardens remain as a rogue faction that has become mainstream in this realm. In short: Let's say half of the "gods" are favorable to us and the other half hates us, allying with the Tiamatic ones.

>Ah, but what about the myths of the vampirization of the Archons/Principalities/Powers?

>Only poetry or madness could do justice to the noises heard by Legrasse's men as they ploughed on through the black morass toward the red glare and the muffled tom-toms. There are vocal qualities peculiar to men, and vocal qualities peculiar to beasts; and it is terrible to hear the one when the source should yield the other. Animal fury and orgiastic licence here whipped themselves to daemoniac heights by howls and squawking ecstasies that tore and reverberated through those nighted woods like pestilential tempests from the gulfs of hell. Now and then the less organised ululation would cease, and from what seemed a well-drilled chorus of hoarse voices would rise in sing-song chant that hideous phrase or ritual:

"Ph'nglui mglw'nafh Cthulhu R'lyeh wgah'nagl fhtagn."

>In a natural glade of the swamp stood a grassy island of perhaps an acre's extent, clear of trees and tolerably dry. On this now leaped and twisted a more indescribable horde of human abnormality than any but a Sime or an Angarola could paint. Void of clothing, this hybrid spawn were braying, bellowing, and writhing about a monstrous ring-shaped bonfire; in the centre of which, revealed by occasional rifts in the curtain of flame, stood a great granite monolith some eight feet in height; on top of which, incongruous with its diminutiveness, rested the noxious carven statuette. From a wide circle of ten scaffolds set up at regular intervals with the flame-girt monolith as a centre hung, head downward, the oddly marred bodies of the helpless squatters who had disappeared. It was inside this circle that the ring of worshippers jumped and roared, the general direction of the mass motion being from left to right in endless Bacchanal between the ring of bodies and the ring of fire.

We have already been initiated; now we need to spread the Donkey God memes beyond this place, the denunciation, the mockery, both to target his drones (Abrahylics) and to open the eyes of those who are already almost there...

The practices will come; we are creating a new esoteric current.

It appears to be in mid-flight, with its wings spread wide and its tail flowing behind it. The dragon's body is covered in intricate patterns and designs, and its eyes are closed, suggesting a sense of power or focus.

The background of the painting is a sepia-toned landscape, which includes a mountainous terrain with a dense forest and a few buildings. The buildings are partially obscured by the dragon, adding a sense of depth to the scene. The sky above is filled with clouds, and there are small figures of people scattered throughout the landscape, adding a sense of movement and life to the scene.

The image is a black and white photograph featuring a close-up of an alien head. The alien has large, round eyes with a prominent nose and a small mouth. Its skin texture appears rough and uneven, with a texture that resembles that of a rock or a mineral. The alien's skin is not smooth, and there are some wrinkles and creases visible. The background is dark and out of focus, which emphasizes the alien's features. There are no discernible texts or other objects in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of a vintage or retro photograph, with a grainy texture that gives it a somewhat aged appearance.

The image is a composite of two photographs side by side. On the left, there is a photograph of a young man with short, light-colored hair. He has a neutral expression and is looking directly at the camera. The background is a solid blue color.

On the right, there is a drawing of a creature with a large, bulbous head and large, expressive eyes. The creature has a greenish-yellow coloration and is drawn with a sketchy, expressive style. The drawing is placed on a piece of lined paper with a grid pattern.

The watermark "JAKO DL" is visible in the bottom left corner of the image. The style of the image is a blend of real-life and artistic representation, with the drawing being a more detailed and expressive version of the man's face.

In all likelihood "wings" are not literal but a visual approximation of a being that has all energy vortexes activated and has unified mind body and spirit at all levels. A "tail" on the other hand would protrude from an astral being operating from basal energy centers. Imagine limit reached so I'll link an example.

Who do I hate? I could say the Jews, but the fact that I am yielding so compliantly to the suggestions of that Austrian (or German) doctor suggests I have nothing against the damned Jews. All I know about the Jews is what my grandfather taught me. "They are the most godless people," he used to say. "They start off from the idea that good must happen here, not beyond the grave. Therefore they work only for the conquest of this world." My childhood years were soured by their specter. My grandfather described those eyes that spy on you, so false as to turn you pale, those unctuous smiles, those hyena lips over bared teeth, those heavy, polluted, brutish looks, those restless creases between nose and lips, wrinkled by hatred, that nose of theirs like the beak of a southern bird...And those eyes, oh those eyes...They roll feverishly, their pupils the color of toasted bread, indicating a diseased liver, corrupted by the secretions produced by eighteen centuries of hatred, framed by a thousand tiny wrinkles that deepen with age, and already at twenty the Jew seems shriveled like an old man. When he smiles, my grandfather explained, his swollen eyelids half close to the point of leaving no more than an imperceptible line, a sign of cunning, some say of lechery...And when I was old enough to understand, he reminded me that the Jew, as well as being as vain as a Spaniard, ignorant as a Croat, greedy as a Levantine, ungrateful as a Maltese, insolent as a Gypsy, dirty as an Englishman, unctuous as a Kalmyk, imperious as a Prussian and as slanderous as anyone from Asti, is adulterous through uncontrollable lust—the result of circumcision, which makes them more erectile, with a monstrous disproportion between their dwarfish build and the thickness of their semi-mutilated protuberance.

I have known Germans, and even worked for them: the lowest conceivable level of humanity. A German produces on average twice the feces of a Frenchman. Hyperactivity of the bowel at the expense of the brain, which demonstrates their physiological inferiority. During times of barbarian invasion, the Germanic hordes strewed their route with great masses of fecal material. In recent centuries, French travelers knew immediately when they had crossed the Alsace frontier by the abnormal size of the turds left lying along the roads. As if that were not enough, the typical German suffers from bromhidrosis—foul-smelling sweat—and it's been shown that the urine of a German contains twenty percent nitrogen, while that of other races has only fifteen. The German lives in a state of perpetual intestinal embarrassment due to an excess of beer and the pork sausages on which he gorges himself. I saw them one evening, during my only visit to Munich, in those species of deconsecrated cathedrals, as smoky as an English port, stinking of suet and lard, sitting in couples, him and her, hands clasped around those tankards of beer which would alone be enough to quench the thirst of a herd of pachyderms, nose to nose in bestial love talk, like two dogs nuzzling each other, with their loud ungainly laughter, their murky guttural hilarity, translucent with a perpetual layer of grease smeared over their faces and limbs, like oil over the skin of athletes from an ancient arena.

They fill their mouths with their Geist, which means spirit, but it's the spirit of the ale, which stultifies them from their youth and explains why, beyond the Rhine, nothing interesting has ever been produced in art, except for a few paintings of repugnant faces and poems of deadly tedium. Not to mention their music: I'm not talking about that funereal noise-monger Wagner, who now drives even the French half crazy, but from the little I have heard of them, the compositions of their Bach too are totally lacking in musicality, cold as a winter's night, and the symphonies of that man Beethoven are an orgy of boorishness. Their abuse of beer makes them incapable of having the slightest notion of their vulgarity, and the height of this vulgarity is that they feel no shame at being German. They took a gluttonous and lecherous monk like Luther seriously (can you really marry a nun?) only because he ruined the Bible by translating it into their own language. Who was it said that they've abused Europe's two great drugs, alcohol and Christianity? They think themselves profound because their language is vague—it does not have the clarity of French, and never says exactly what it should, so no German ever knows what he meant to say, and mistakes this uncertainty for depth. With Germans, as with women, you never get to the point. Unfortunately, when I was a child, my grandfather (not surprisingly, with his Austrian sympathies) made me learn this inexpressive language, with verbs you have to search out carefully as you read, since they are never where they ought to be. And so I hated this language, as much as I hated the Jesuit who came to teach it to me, caning my knuckles as he did so.

They took a gluttonous and lecherous monk like Luther seriously (can you really marry a nun?) only because he ruined the Bible by translating it into their own language. Since the time when that man Gobineau wrote about the inequality of the human races, it seems that if someone speaks ill of another race it is because he regards his own to be better. I have no bias. As soon as I became French (and I was already half French through my mother) I realized that my new compatriots were lazy, swindling, resentful, jealous, proud beyond all measure, to the point of thinking that anyone who is not French is a savage and incapable of accepting criticism. I have also understood that to induce a Frenchman to recognize a flaw in his own breed, it is enough to speak ill of another, like saying "We Poles have such and such a defect," and since they do not want to be second to anyone, even in wrong, they react with "Oh no, here in France we are worse," and they start running down the French until they realize they've been caught out. They do not like their own kind, even when advantage is to be gained from it. No one is as rude as a French innkeeper. He seems to hate his clients (perhaps he does) and to wish they weren't there (and that's certainly not so, because the Frenchman is most avaricious). Ils grognent toujours. Try asking him something. "Sais pas, moi," he'll respond, and pout as if he's about to blow a raspberry. They are vicious. They kill out of boredom. They are the only people who kept their citizens busy for several years cutting each other's heads off, and it was a good thing that Napoleon diverted their anger onto those of another race, marching them off to destroy Europe.

If I have become French, it's because I couldn't bear being Italian. Being Piedmontese (by birth), I felt I was only the caricature of a Gaul, but more narrow-minded. The people of Piedmont flinch at the idea of anything new. They are terrorized by the unexpected: to get them to move as far as the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies (though very few of Garibaldi's men were Piedmontese) required two Ligurians, a hothead like Garibaldi and an evil character like Mazzini. And let's not mention what I discovered when I was sent to Palermo (when was it? I'd have to work it out). Only that conceited fool Dumas loved those people, perhaps because they adored him more than did the French, who always regarded him as a half-caste. He was liked by the Neapolitans and Sicilians, who are mulattos themselves, not through the fault of a strumpet mother but through generations of history, born from the interbreeding of faithless Levantines, sweaty Arabs and degenerate Ostrogoths, who took the worst of each of their hybrid forebears—laziness from the Saracens, savagery from the Swabians, and from the Greeks, indecision and a taste for losing themselves in idle talk until they have split a hair into four. In any event, it's quite enough to see the guttersnipes in Naples who fascinate foreigners by gulping down spaghetti, which they stuff into their gullets with their fingers, spattering themselves with rancid tomato. I've never seen them do it, but I know. The Italian is an untrustworthy, lying, contemptible traitor, finds himself more at ease with a dagger than a sword, better with poison than medicine, a slippery bargainer, consistent only in changing sides with the wind—and I saw what happened to those Bourbon generals the moment Garibaldi's adventurers and Piedmontese generals appeared.

The fact is that the Italians have modeled themselves on the clergy, the only true government they've had since the time that pervert the last Roman emperor was bugged by the barbarians, because Christianity wore down the pride of the ancient race. Priests...How did I come to know them? At my grandfather's house, I think. I have a vague memory of shifty looks, decaying teeth, bad breath and sweaty hands trying to caress the back of my neck. Disgusting. They are idle and belong to a class as dangerous as thieves and vagrants. They become priests or friars only to live a life of idleness, and idleness is guaranteed by their number. If there were, say, one priest for every thousand people, they'd have so much to do that they couldn't laze about eating capons. And from the most unworthy priests the government chooses the stupidest, and appoints them bishops. You have them around as soon as you are born, when they baptize you; you have them at school, if your parents have been so fervent as to send you to them; then first communion, catechism, confirmation; there's a priest on your wedding day to tell you what to do in bed, and the day after at confession to ask you how many times you did it, so he can arouse himself behind the grille. They talk with horror about sex, but every day you see them getting out of an incestuous bed without so much as washing their hands, and they eat and drink their Lord, then shit and piss him out.

They keep saying that their kingdom is not of this world, then take everything they can lay their hands on. Civilization will never reach perfection until the last stone of the last church has fallen on the last priest, and the earth is rid of that evil lot. The communists have spread the idea that religion is the opium of the people. That's correct, because it is used to keep a lid on people's temptations, and without religion there would be twice the number of people on the barricades, whereas during the days of the Commune there weren't enough, and they could be gunned down without much trouble. But after hearing that Austrian doctor talk about the advantages of the Colombian drug, I would say religion is also the cocaine of the people, because religion has always led to wars and the massacre of infidels, and this is true of Christians, Muslims and other idolaters. And while the Negroes of Africa confined themselves to massacring each other, the missionaries converted them and made them into colonial troops, ideally suited to dying on the front line and raping white women when they reached a city. People are never so completely and enthusiastically evil as when they act out of religious conviction.

Worst of all, without a doubt, are the Jesuits. I have the feeling I have played a few tricks on them, or perhaps it's they who have done me wrong, I'm not sure which. Or perhaps it was their blood brothers, the Masons. They're like the Jesuits, only more confused. The Jesuits at least have their theology and know how to use it, but the Masons have too much of it and lose their heads. My grandfather told me about the Masons. Along with the Jews, they had cut off the king's head. And they created the Carbonari, who are more stupid than the Masons —once they got themselves shot, and later on they had their heads cut off for making a mistake in producing a bomb, or they became socialists, communists and Communards. All up against the wall. Well done, Thiers! Masons and Jesuits. Masons are Jesuits dressed up as women.

"6000 YEAR OLD ARYAN MUMMY UNCOVERED IN SOUTH AMERICA

For the first time officially, a recognized genetic study has detected European genes on South American mummies over 6000 years old, specifically Chinchorro from northern Chile.

"One of them, from a Chinchorro mummy in northern Chile dating from 3972 to 3806 BC, contains 30 to 40% European ancestry... The first ancient genetic evidence of pre-Viking transatlantic contact."

This is a huge revelation. It is a fact: the white man was present in South America several millennia ago, supporting Native American legends about the presence of white civilizing gods and pre-Columbian founding myths."

Yes its pretty interesting, cover ups, talk of giants...

>As he carefully raised the lid of a long, boat-shaped wooden coffin discovered at an ancient burial site in the Xinjiang Uygur autonomous region, Liao Zhaoyu joked to his colleagues that they had discovered one of the fabled giants of Chinese legend. When the lid was finally opened and Liao caught his first glimpse of the body inside, he was astonished to see a golden-haired figure that was even taller than Yao Ming, the famous 2.26-meter-tall basketball player. Even though the discovery happened more than five years ago, Liao, director of the institute of the Culture of the Western Region at Tarim University in Alar, couldn't hide his excitement when he recalled the moment he came face to face with the tallest man of a "tribe of giants". "The skeleton of the tallest mummy discovered so far is about 2.3 meters, and the coffin is about 2.8 meters long, but medical experts say the man may have been even taller when he was alive. In addition to features similar to those of ancient Europeans, such as blond hair and high cheekbones, many of the mummies or skeletons have large frames, more than 2 meters tall," said the 40-year-old, who was one of the first experts to explore the site in 2003 at the request of local farmers

I'm going to tell you about one of the methods of the Warden's servants...

They distort the truth in such a way that good is evil and evil is good; they use good in "appearance," but in reality, they follow evil. An example? Gog and Magog, in reality, that refers to ancient Scythia, Tartaria (descendants of Atlantis), but in truth, the real Gog and Magog are precisely the Khazarian devils of the Black and Caspian Seas, after the Caucasus mts. They portray Aryan peoples as enemies to hide the reality (they are the true enemies). The same thing with Esau (which doesn't truly refer to the Edomites of the southern Levant, but to all aryan people; they themselves identified the Romans as Edomites, etc.).

Now comes the bomb: the Nephilim are not synonymous with evil, nor are they monsters; they are literally the first Aryans! The Bene-Elohim (Liebenfels' Elektrozoa) are the ancestral "gods" of the Aryans! They have been demonized around the world, as this is how the wardens operate. Logically, some modified lineages became the insatiable giants (note that most of them are red-haired and Caucasian) and wild men...

>There were giants in the earth in those days; and also after that, when the sons of God came in unto the daughters of men, and they bare children to them, the same became mighty men which were of old, men of renown.

"Giants" in the spiritual psychic sense. Great potential for good and evil. The world thought it it kills greatness is can eliminate great evil, but like any metastatic cancer it can operate as a fragmented hive while the true body of man cannot. Weakness is never a virtue.

>"Giants" in the spiritual psychic sense.

No, traditions are categorical about the existence of giants (and we have evidence of the existence of giants; a good part of them were eradicated by the same people who created history as we know it). This spiritualist talk of reducing everything to metaphors is the stuff of shady New Age nonsense; the REAL secret orders and renowned traditions know that in the past there were monsters, giants, gods, things unfathomable to the modern mind...

>Quinametzin

The Quinametzin populated the world during the previous era of the Sun of Rain (Nahui-Quiahuitl). The construction of the pyramid of Cholula and the City of Teotihuacan (The Place Where Men Become Gods) was attributed to the Quinametzin. The Quinametzin were punished by the Aztec gods because they did not venerate them and their peak-civilization came to an end as a result of great calamities and as a punishment from the heavens for grave sins they had committed.

Where have I seen this before?

[313 / 152]The image is a black and white illustration that depicts a scene of a towering, ancient-looking structure with a circular emblem at its apex. The structure appears to be made of stone and is surrounded by ruins and debris, suggesting a desolate or abandoned setting. In the foreground, there is a figure standing on the ground, wearing a long cloak and holding a staff. The figure's posture and the staff suggest a sense of authority or leadership. The background is dark and moody, with a dramatic sky and a large, radiant sun or star-like emblem radiating from the center of the structure. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of fantasy or science fiction, with its use of dark colors and dramatic lighting.

#3: Stardust

ITT we work to purify the Aryan/Indo-European currents of the cursed entanglement of the Saturnian cultists of the black stone, worshippers of the donkey god Set/Typhon/Yhwh. Within every myth there is a solar current and a chthonic one; we need to separate the wheat from the chaff and recover the solar myth. Thinking of recounting the secret history of monsters and the H.G. Wells connection, sword masters floorplan, breath, parallel Earth, falls, apocalypses, and the Saturn Ring Makers.

The image is a painting that depicts a scene with a mystical or supernatural theme. In the foreground, there is a hand with a ring on the ring finger, extending towards the viewer. The hand is adorned with a tattered garment, and the fingers are extended outward, as if casting a spell or performing a ritual. The hand is surrounded by a swirling, sparkling light that emanates from the fingers, creating a sense of energy or power.

The background of the painting features a landscape with a desert-like terrain and a body of water, possibly a lake or a river, with hills and a distant mountain range. The sky is a clear blue with a full moon visible in the top right corner, suggesting it is either dawn or dusk. The overall color palette is warm, with hues of orange, yellow, and brown, which contribute to the mystical and otherworldly atmosphere of the scene.

There are no texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the painting is realistic with a touch of fantasy, and it is rendered in a realistic manner with attention to detail. The painting is a realistic representation of a scene, and it does not contain any imaginary or fantastical elements.

>And Earth first bore starry Heaven, equal to herself, to cover her on every side, and to be an ever-sure abiding-place for the blessed gods.
(Hesiod, Theogony)

“Since stardust atoms are the heavier elements, the percentage of star mass in our body is much more impressive. Most of the hydrogen in our body floats around in the form of water. The human body is about 60% water and hydrogen only accounts for 11% of that water mass. Even though water consists of two hydrogen atoms for every oxygen, hydrogen has much less mass. We can conclude that 93% of the mass in our body is stardust. Just think, long ago someone may have wished upon a star that you are made of.”

As the wheel turns full circle, religion in the coming golden age will be as it once was, astrotheological ie. stars and planets as "stations" for Gods and Goddesses. This was the religion of the Aryan magi, those who followed the stars. Primarily esoteric for the noble elite, exoteric for the masses, this being in accordance with natural law and the sacred traditions of our race. Rooted in the musico-cosmology called musica universalis, ancient string theory, our timeless ancestral astral cult inhabits that liminal space where speech, lit fire, becomes Word, and poetry becomes myth.

“These celestial bodies are not to be sought by us outside in some other place; for the heavens in their entirety are within us, in whom the light of life and the origin of heaven dwell.

>"The civilization of Uruk traces to that of Sumer. And it is precisely here that the truth can be run to ground for the language of Sumer is the oldest written language that we have. And in that language, very much as in that of the Egyptians (to the ancient Egyptians, the synonymy of gods and planets was so complete that, in some instances, the same word was employed to signify either. Thus sba, among other things, meant "star," but Sba was also the name of a "star" god. The word netru meant "stars," but it also meant "gods."), so in Uruk the word and/or cuneiform sign for "god" and "star" was one and the same - * - a symbol derived from the pictograph which preceded cuneiform writing is the very picture of a star." (anon)

In White Vedic India Deva meant "god", "shining one", and "to play", with us I assume. This has the same Proto-Indo-European root **deiwo* (an adjective meaning "celestial" or "shining) as **dyeus*, which may have originally referred to "heavenly shining father" and hence "Father Sky".

"Last she wedded Shining One, who was related to the Æsir. Their son was Day. He was bright and fair like his father." (Gylfaginning, Snorri Sturluson)

"Then the LORD opened the donkey's mouth, and she said to Balaam, "What have I done to you to make you beat me these three times?" Balaam answered the donkey, "You have made a fool of me! If I had a sword in my hand, I would kill you right now."The donkey said to Balaam, "Am I not your own donkey, which you have always ridden, to this day? Have I been in the habit of doing this to you?" "No," he said. Then the LORD opened Balaam's eyes, and he saw the angel of the LORD standing in the road with his sword drawn. So he bowed low and fell facedown." (Numbers 22:28-31)

>Onolatryis the worship of thedonkeyduring antiquity. InImperial Rome, the charge of onolatry was used as a polemic againstJewsandJewish Christians. The association of Jews with donkeys was a common feature ofHellenicas well as Latin ethnographic and historical writings, and included accusations of worshipping a golden donkey head and even sacrificing foreigners to it at intervals.

"Historian. [He wrote]Tacticsin 2 books, [and]On the Jews; in which [latter] he says that they bowed down to the golden head of an ass and every seven years hunted a stranger and attacked him and tore his flesh into thin strips and thus killed him." (Damocritus, Suda, Delta #49)

It's recorded by the Romans that they ate the guy too, jews have a taste for Greeks apparently and Aryans in general, especially children.

>The notion of the evil (Judean) creator had existed for centuries in native Egyptian revisionary mythology. The notion was thus already prepared for its early Christian application to the Judeo-catholic creator. Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans identified the evil god Seth-Typhon (often depicted as a donkey-like creature) with the Jewish god Yahweh. The Seth-Yahweh tradition, with all its negative valence, was then applied to the creator worshiped by Christians as well. Evidence for this view comes from the early Christian depiction of the creator and his sons in donkey (Typhonian) form. In addition to material culture (gems, amulets, and graffiti), four texts are analyzed in this chapter: The Birth of Mary, the Secret Book of John, the so-called Ophite diagram, and the Phibionites described by Epiphanius.

Posted in the last thread, not sure if anyone besides L noticed, I didn't point it out. This is a passage I found in the Talmud via a clue left in the footnotes of "Blood Passover" previously unknown to anyone besides certain jews (did post it in frens a couple of years back, don't think anyone noticed). It's one of those things that's hard to apprehend, it constitutes an admission of guilt, and likely the best proof of cannibalistic jew "blood libel" existent. In the battle against the jewish donkey demon, this is propaganda gold. Would be great if someone could make a meme, and/or frens pass along the screen (picrel), share the passage.

Jews literally came from Mt. Doom.

The oldest myths we still retain put the kike at Mt. Sarsar ie. Mt. Seir in Jordan around the area of Petra (then called Edom) where they were known as Suteans, Shasu, and Hibiru. They took over the temple belonging to the Horites here, prior to this they were murderous nomadic bandits in the Sinai.

>Mount Seir (Hebrew: הַר-שֵׁעִיר, romanized: Har Sē'īr) is the ancient and biblical name for a mountainous region stretching between the Dead Sea and the Gulf of Aqaba in the northwestern region of Edom and southeast of the Kingdom of Judah. It may also have marked the older historical limit of Ancient Egypt in Canaan. A place called "Seir, in the land of Shasu" (𐎗-šꜥsw sꜥr – ta-Shasu se'er), thought to be near Petra, Jordan, is listed in the temple of Amenhotep III at Soleb (ca. 1380 BC)

Remember, the profound is material for general discussion; the superficial is the denunciation of the Donkey God, Saturnian cult, black stone, and Abrahamism. Now is the time; the noetic battlefield has begun. We have already been initiated; now we need to spread the Donkey God memes beyond this place, the denunciation, the mockery, both to target his drones (Abrahylics) and to open the eyes of those who are already almost there...

The practices will come; we are creating a new esoteric current.

The title reads "Catholic Laws on Judaism" and below it, there is a URL in white text that reads "http://archive.is/mKNUy". The photograph depicts a group of people, presumably Jewish, gathered in a room. The individuals are dressed in formal attire, with some wearing suits and others in more casual clothing. The room has a formal ambiance, with a table in the foreground and a window in the background. The photograph is taken from a slightly elevated angle, providing a view of the people and the room. The style of the image is informative and appears to be a screenshot from a document or a website, possibly related to Jewish law or religious practices.

Fascinating, never come across these Sufi teachings before, closest I have read is the "bright darkness" mentioned in Hesychasm. I've seen it though, years ago on the edge of death in the rune ritual, it seemed not be the end but no way back if you went in, this report seems to confirm that, total dissolution of self. But there is a way isn't there? to cross the void intact, the external path of the Aryan magi, the one guarded by the gatekeeper.

The image is a page from a book or publication, featuring a black and white illustration of a circular emblem with a central figure that appears to be a humanoid figure with a long beard and a crown. The emblem is surrounded by a border that includes a stylized representation of a tree with a cross-like structure at its base. The text surrounding the emblem is in a serif font, and it is written in English. The text discusses the concept of the "Elder of the Microprosopus" and the "Elder of the Macroprosopus," which are two forms of the same entity. The text also mentions the "Elder of the Holy Face," which is a form of the "Elder of the Microprosopus," and the "Elder of the Holy Face" is said to be "long-faced" and "not always long-like." The text concludes with a statement that the "Elder of the Holy Face" is "not always long-like," and it is mentioned that the "Elder of the Holy Face" is "long-faced" and "not always long-like." The text is in a serif font and is set against a plain background, which contrasts with the intricate design of the emblem.

Mentioned the black sun had no face in one of the earlier threads, and that the demiurge has many. Came across a similar reference in the (le super advanced) Kabbalah book that was linked, the one that confirmed the hypothesis of a second Earth unnaturally divided from our own by the demiurge, the wave portion of wave-particle duality, geocentric Earth.

The image is a page from an old book or a printed document, likely from the 19th century, as indicated by the style of the text and the appearance of the page. The text is in English and is written in a serif font, which is characteristic of the typeface used in the 19th century. The text is in a larger font size compared to the surrounding text, which suggests that it is a significant part of the document.

The content of the text is a discussion on the concept of the "Kabbalah," which is a Jewish mystical tradition. The text discusses the concept of the "microcosm" and the "macrocosm," which are terms used to describe the universe and the universe within the universe. The text also mentions the "Zohar," a major work in Jewish mysticism, and the "Kabbalah," which is a branch of the Zohar.

The text is written in a formal and academic style, with references to various texts and scholars, such as the "Zohar" and the "Kabbalah." The text is structured in paragraphs, with each paragraph beginning with a colon, which is a common way to break up long blocks of text in academic or formal writing.

The image does not provide any additional visual elements beyond the text itself. The focus is solely on the text, and there are no images, illustrations, or other visual elements present in the image. The text is the primary subject of the image, and the image does not contain any additional information or context that would help to understand the content of the text.

Anyway kikes call the unmanifest black sun beyond demiurgic corporality Silent, holiest of the holy. The donkey demon demiurge is Macroprosopus, the gay holy ancient one, elder of elders etc. Already they have swapped the greater for the lesser, and the hall of mirrors just gets more confusing because part of the black sun, Microprospus, unknowingly gets reflected into the light trap, the wounded King as opposite to the Macroprosopus/demiurge, a function of the newly established duality, the rupture.

>the original nothing was from the beginning outside the elder of elders, - opposite to him -, - other than himself. In it the elder of elders was reflected as in a mirror.

What are the secret messages contained in Jurassic Park?

If you watched the first movie (the book is even more detailed, but we'll cite the film due to the silver screen's more powerful impact on the subconscious), remember the film is basically about: An eccentric man uses esoteric scientific methods (in the sense of being inaccessible to the academic mainstream) to create chimeras on an isolated island. Visitors arrive on the island and marvel at that profane science. The creatures rebel against their creator and chaos ensues...

This might be enough for some of you to recall another, older story...

The Island of Dr. Moreau, by H.G. Wells.

Before we embark on direct comparisons between the works and delve deeper into the attempt to decipher the symbolic ciphers of both, we need to talk about H.G. Wells.

>Who was H.G. Wells?

Herbert George Wells, or H.G. Wells, was simply one of the most influential science fiction writers of the last two centuries. Some of his works are The Time Machine, The War of the Worlds, The Invisible Man... Works that certainly remain in the popular imagination to this day.

Wells studied biology at the Normal School of Science and was tutored by Thomas Henry Huxley, effectively "Darwin's bulldog," a nickname given to him for his fierce defenses of the Darwinian hypothesis of evolution. Mr. Wells was not a mere speculator; he possessed actual knowledge in the field of biology and experience of the London scene, precisely during the period when all this scientific fervor was underway. Those more knowledgeable about the subject are already aware of the historical and chronological resets, and especially the issue of the "Old World," Tartaria, etc. But first, we have a bit more about Mr. Wells to cover...

H.G. Wells was a member of the Fabian Society, from his youth a fervent socialist... Stop and think about that: one of the greatest science fiction writers in modern history was a socialist... It stands to reason that his views transpired in his works, right? Correct... But we must remember that socialism in any of its forms is nothing more than a "Masonic" product, which in turn descends from even more obscure projects. We are talking about ideologies that stem from "Talmudic" blueprints, so to speak. But don't be mistaken, it's much deeper than simply blaming the Frankists, Sabbateans, or Scottish Freemasons. In any case, the small-hat tribe is directly involved.

Also, the Fabian Society's logo being a wolf in sheep's clothing is almost comical. They weren't the least bit concerned with hiding the fact that their method of infiltrating society was like a wolf infiltrating a flock of sheep; it wasn't revolutionary, it was gradual...

Technocratic and socialist utopian literatures were, for the most part, the result of a scientific and materialist wave that swept the human noosphere, primarily through books and science fiction novels. It is possible to identify the seed of the ZOG-style New World Order concept that the anons vehemently denounce, in the writings of Mr. Wells. We are talking about fiction and especially about NON-FICTION books, literal construction plans left for human civilization to build ZOG...

>H.G. Wells not only predicted modern warfare, the bombing of London, atomic bombs, the League of Nations, stealth fighters over Iraq, space flight, and countless other details of the future, long before their eventual occurrence, and mapped out in detail how a New World Order could be created, but he participated in causing the events that followed.

Literally, Mr. Wells conversed with Lenin and played an active role in the creation of the League of Nations... He and Lenin had disagreements, since Lenin envisioned achieving the socialist NWO through a strong government, while Wells advocated for a "benevolent" technocratic elite.

Years later, in '34, he spoke with Roosevelt and Stalin. After speaking with the cripple, he declared: "The United States... [was] the most effective transmission instrument possible for the coming of the New World Order." About Stalin: "I have never met a man more sincere, fair, and honest... and nothing hidden and sinister... everyone trusts him." Anonymous Sun 23 Nov 2025 10:59:29 No.41543977 Report

>Now look at the titles of his books "Anticipation" and "Things to Come" and the way they were written, and it is evident that he is psychologically conditioning the public to accept the steps of the New World Order as if they were self-evident. He was a master at this. And, indeed, when I hear the elite today I hear echoes of H. G. Wells's ideas.

For example, David Rockefeller at the 1991 Bilderberg meeting: "...the world is now more sophisticated and prepared to march towards a world government which will never know war again, but only peace and prosperity for all humanity."

It's interesting to emphasize the point that other anons have already brought up here, the idea of progress as a gradual and self-evident evolution is an enlightenment farce, a project to remove the old order and introduce the new order as the absolute path in favor of scientific materialism. It's one of the reasons why some more traditionalist anons are opposed to transhumanism; the notion in which most authors use these concepts is fundamentally linked to the ZOG NWO... It's the dystopia that the films of the 70s and 80s warned about so much (also part of the revelation of the method they love to do).

>He opposed christians being allowed to teach their children about God and religious tolerance. Of course, along with the insider knowledge, H.G. contained an intense intellectual curiosity, a comprehensive, sharp brain, great willpower, and a contempt for the common man and the Christian God. He revealed in The Undying Fire (1917), that his deity was "a personification... the Five-Year Plan".

Mr. Wells held a curious concept that reminds us of the revelation of the method and expiation of karma, already mentioned. He believed in "open conspiracy"... For him, the key pieces would be on display; people would be working, knowingly or not, on the construction of the new world order. It wouldn't be a secret, but a conspiracy visible to all, perhaps disguised in NGOs, culture, political movements, etc. Although Wells was supposedly a staunch materialist, the concept of open conspiracy strongly resembles the ideas of the Externalization of the Hierarchy by Alice Bailey, a Theosophical occultist who wrote about a Hierarchy of evolved beings revealing themselves increasingly in modern civilization to influence the building of a new world order according to esoteric teachings. Mr. Wells is, in every respect, an occultist, even if cloaked in a scientific and technocratic guise. Remember, his "plans" and hints do not imply he was the grand master and brains behind the entire ZOGuist project; he was merely unveiling the secret knowledge of the black cabal...

>For those familiar with the way (((they))) created groups like the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR) and the Trilateral Commission (TLC), it is noteworthy that H.G. was part of the RIIA (Royal Institute of International Affairs), which was the British equivalent of the CFR. Edith Starr Miller in Occult Theocracy (posthumously in 1933) does a good job of linking the myriad of organizations the dark fraternity produces to carry out its program, and the Fabian Society was one of them. H.G. was an active member of the Fabian Society, as we saw earlier.

>The Island of Dr. Moreau

Keep these terms in mind:

Genetic Engineering, Vivisection, Abiogenesis, Takwin, Tulpa, Golem, Homunculus

In summary:

>The protagonist Prendick is rescued from the sea by a ship and taken to the island of the mysterious Doctor Moreau, a scientist exiled from society for his unethical practices. On the island, he discovers that Moreau performs vivisections (dissection of living beings) and grotesque genetic experiments on animals, turning them into humanoid creatures, the so-called "Beast-Men." These creatures live under a forced moral code, a "Law" created by Moreau to keep them submissive. However, over time, these beings begin to regress to their animal nature, challenging the imposed artificial order. When Moreau is killed by one of his creations, the fragile society of the island collapses. Prendick is forced to survive alone among the creatures until he finally manages to escape.

Before the Mendelian revolutions, the primary understanding of altering biological forms and functions, in order to create new life forms, was based on pushing the limits of bodily plasticity through vivisection. Mr. Wells literally witnessed the wave of vivisection in the academia of his time... This advanced knowledge of "surgery" and "transplants" dates back to immemorial times; we can cite, for example, the Miracle of the Black Leg or Moor... Saints Cosmas and Damian are associated through syncretism in Brazil with childlike entities of African origins, however, the true story of the two dates back to the Middle East, in the third century AD..

>Born in Arabia, Cosmas and Damian lived in Aegeae, a small community between Turkey and Syria. They were twin brothers and studied medicine in Antioch, where they practiced among the poor of their community without receiving any money in return. Because they did not accept payment for their services, they were called anargyroi, or "the silverless ones." Under the reign of Emperor Diocletian (284-305 AD), they were stoned, condemned, and beheaded. Their bodies were taken to Cyrrhus in northern Syria and then buried on the site of an Asklepieion, an ancient temple dedicated to the Greek god Asklepios (by "coincidence," a god of medicine), where priests treated patients through "incubation" or "temple sleep."

The official narrative will present this relationship between "paganism" and the saints' miraculous medicine as an affront by the apostate Diocletian, but the oddities allow us to doubt this story.

>During the Middle Ages, their remains were dispersed (relics), but their devotion spread widely across Europe: they were particularly honored in Florence by the Medici family, the city's rulers. In fact, the surname Medici was the Latin word for physicians. Cosmas and Damian were especially associated with medicine, which, at the time, involved pharmacy.

Again, a medicinal link, and now we have an elite lineage corroborating this maintenance of ancient knowledge concerning surgery, transplantation, and vivisection... It doesn't take much research to realize that this medical cabal has a haunting relationship with the "Renaissance" period, or rather, the reset period. It is precisely at this time that revisionist authors point to a chronological and historical cover-up, perhaps related to cataclysms... Archaeological artifacts from the classical period appearing simultaneously across Europe, strange paintings and engravings depicting remnants of civilizations, the reintroduction of esoteric and mystical concepts by initiatory orders... It is the period where the old order (within the official chronological narrative) begins to fail, and (((they))) advance their plans. I have already made a thread here about the Theodosian code and how they tunneled into Western civilization through the Catholic Church...

"But look there," he continued, "there, sandwiched between that nightmare of Huysmans', and Walpole's Castle of Otranto—Von Junzt's Nameless Cults. There's a book to keep you awake at night!"

"I've read it," said Taverel, "and I'm convinced the man is mad. His work is like the conversation of a maniac—it runs with startling clarity for awhile, then suddenly merges into vagueness and disconnected ramblings."

Conrad shook his head. "Have you ever thought that perhaps it is his very sanity that causes him to write in that fashion? What if he dares not put on paper all he knows? What if his vague suppositions are dark and mysterious hints, keys to the puzzle, to those who know?"

"Bosh!" This from Kirowan. "Are you intimating that any of the nightmare cults referred to by Von Junzt survive to this day—if they ever existed save in the hag-ridden brain of a lunatic poet and philosopher?"

"Not he alone used hidden meanings," answered Conrad.

The image is a surrealistic painting that depicts a group of figures standing on a beach with a large, ominous figure looming in the background. The figure is a large, shadowy silhouette with tentacle-like appendages, and it appears to be a monstrous creature with a humanoid form. The sky is filled with clouds and stars, and the overall color palette is dominated by shades of purple and blue. The figures are dressed in dark, possibly gothic-style clothing, and they are facing the creature, which suggests a sense of confrontation or awe. The painting style is reminiscent of the Art Nouveau movement, characterized by its use of flowing lines and organic forms. The style is reminiscent of the works of Salvador Dali and other surrealist artists.

Only the least fraction was really matter in any sense we know. It was like its father—and most of it has gone back to him in some vague realm of dimension outside our material universe; some vague abyss out of which only the most accursed rites of human blasphemy could ever have called him for a moment on the hills. ...You needn't ask how Wilbur called it out of the air. The image is a black and white illustration featuring a large, tentacled creature with multiple tentacles and a prominent eye. The creature appears to be emerging from a dark, rocky landscape with a narrow, pointed archway leading into it. The archway is flanked by two smaller, more slender arches on either side. The creature's tentacles are intertwined and extend outwards, creating a sense of chaos and movement.

In the background, there are other elements that contribute to the overall dark and mysterious atmosphere. There are jagged, jagged lines and shapes that resemble otherworldly structures or creatures, suggesting a fantastical or otherworldly setting.

At the bottom of the image, there is text that reads "YOG-SOITH," which could be a title or a name associated with the artwork. The text is in a bold, capitalized font that stands out against the monochrome background. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of the dark fantasy genre, with its use of dark colors and intricate details.

On the right, there is a sketch of a human head with a large, round, and somewhat bulbous face. The sketch is in a realistic style, with fine lines and shading that give it a three-dimensional appearance. The head is facing the viewer, and the eyes are drawn with a simple, straight line, with the eyebrows and the nose being the most detailed features. The hair is drawn in a simple, straight line, and the overall style of the sketch is reminiscent of the Art Nouveau movement.

The photograph and the sketch are separated by a white space, and there is no text present in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of a historical photograph,

The Typhonian equivalence is apparent.

>Cthulhu can be rendered in the Sumerian language as kutu lu or “the man from Kutu” or “the man from the Underworld.” Kutu—the Biblical Gduha, sometimes rendered Kutu or Kuta—was the ancient city of Cutha, sacred to Nergal and the entrance to the Underworld in Sumerian religion. It was also the city in Mesopotamia with special relevance for Islam, for it was the city where the Qureish were from. The Qureish are, of course, the tribe of the Prophet Muhammad, the tribe in charge of the pagan shrine in Mecca known as the Ka'aba or the Black Stone.

>Crowley's Liber XXXVI72 contains a formula for establishing contact with the Old Ones through the invocation of Set, son of Isis and brother of Horus.

>it can be shown that Semitic ideas of Satan derive from the ancient Egyptian god Set, then Grant's hypothesis that Set-Shaitan-Typhon are one and the same takes on increased importance. By identifying Aiwass with this signifier we may understand the Book of the Law a little better, particularly its controversial third chapter which sets the New Aeon in complete opposition to the world's religions in a dramatic and even violent way. The message of Liber AL then becomes a message consistent with the personality and objectives of Set, the Dark Lord.

"Thus Grant was able to see in Lovecraft's stories—particularly those of the Cthulhu Mythos—a message from the stars as important (or, at least, as relevant) as that received by Crowley. Possibly Lovecraft resisted the message because he loathed the messenger: the creepy, hideous beings that Grant calls “Typhonian Teratomas” monstrous offspring created by the intercourse between humans and alien forms of life and the source of Lovecraft's vision of "revolting fertility rites of immemorial antiquity." In stories like "The Dunwich Horror," Lovecraft suggests the possibility that humans and alien beings could mate and produce children who would then be hideously ugly and possessed of strange abilities. The idea that humans could somehow mate with gods, demons, and other beings is a staple of much European and Middle Eastern religion and legend. The Greek and Roman myths are full of such tales, and in the Babylonian Talmud and in various Kabbalistic and other texts we have references to Lilith (picrel) the Queen of the Night, sometimes as the first spouse of Adam and the demons as her children with the evil spirit Samael."

The image is a page from a book or a document, likely a historical or religious text, as indicated by the text and the style of the writing. The text is in English and appears to be a part of a larger work, as indicated by the context provided by the surrounding text.

The text is in a serif font, which is commonly used for formal or academic writing. The text is divided into paragraphs, and the spacing between them is consistent, suggesting a structured and organized presentation of ideas.

The content of the text is dense and includes a mix of historical references, philosophical discussions, and theological or religious themes. The text discusses the nature of kings, the role of the Elder of Elders, and the influence of the Collective Adam on establishing and maintaining the order of nature. It also touches on the concept of the universe, the influence of individual men and women, and the order of nature.

The text is written in a way that is both formal and conversational, with phrases like "Before the Elder of elders, the most hidden of hidden things, instituting the forms of the Kings, and of the idols of idols, there was neither beginning nor ending." and "Thus far, the writers of the Zohar have spoken of the influence of the Collective Adam in establishing and maintaining the order of nature."

The text is also marked with footnotes, which are indicated by the numbers "39" and "35" at the bottom of the page. These footnotes likely provide additional information or references to the text, but they are not part of the main body of the text.

The overall style of the image is that of a historical or religious document, and the text is likely from a book or a publication that is of historical or religious significance. The image does not provide any additional visual elements beyond the text itself.

It is considered, in light of a certain heterodox tradition, that divine archetypes represent transcendent operative principles, whose symbolic understanding was, in remote epochs, applied in an effective manner. The goddesses mentioned, Artemis of Ephesus, Isis, Aphrodite, Cybele, embody diverse facets of a single principle: the Autonomous Primordial Matrix, that is, the capacity for the generation of life independent of the paradigm of complementary duality.

This potency is not merely allegorical. The statuary of Artemis, with its multiple breasts or eggs, and its association with the Melissae (bees), configures a precise symbolism of a serialized production of life, a ritually conducted parthenogenesis. In an analogous manner, the myth of Isis, who through the utterance of formulas restores life and generates Horus, reveals a protocol of magical insemination or ritual cloning, where the verb and knowledge replace ordinary biological means. Aphrodite, emerging from the fertilized sea foam, and Cybele, mistress of the fertile chaos, complete this picture, illustrating generation from primordial substances and vectors of pure desire.

The beehive, therefore, emerges as the perfect model of this organic economy: a collective, hierarchical, and chemically controlled womb, where the queen, via pheromones, an intuitive hormonal engineering, ensures the continuity of life. The cosmic egg, a universal symbol, is the iconographic representation of this principle of autonomous incubation.

Consequently, the great temples of Antiquity, such as that of Artemis at Ephesus, cannot be reduced to mere places of worship. Their architecture, location, and symbolism indicate a more profound function: that of biotechnological installations. They were, in essence, artificialized cosmic wombs, where the priestesses, the Melissae, operated as technicians of a lost bio-alchemy. Through chants, sacred geometry, and the manipulation of substances, these structures could have been capable of influencing vital processes, stimulating parthenogenesis, or even performing embryological modifications.

From this perspective, the hybrid beings of mythologies, chimeras, cynocephali, blemmyae, cease to be mere fantasies. They represent the record, albeit distorted, of the products or accidents resulting from these archaic bioengineering operations. Esoteric tradition, in turn, attributes the origin of this knowledge to three main sources: to the Technologist Gods of a proto-history, to the Priest-Alchemists of lost civilizations, or to non-human entities who conducted their experiments here.

The modern narrative, such as that of Jurassic Park, with its female cloning and subsequent parthenogenetic adaptation, is a secularized echo of this same archetype. Contemporary biotechnology, thus, does not inaugurate, but rather rediscovers, the principles of a sacred science of life, once practiced in the sanctuaries of the Great Mother. The monsters are, therefore, the vestiges of that primordial technology, and the goddesses, its symbolic and operative interfaces.

The geography of Mordor in Tolkien's work reveals itself not as an allegory, but as a conscious representation of a specific geopolitical and historical reality: the region of the Caucasus and the Caspian Sea. The evidence is topographically irrefutable:

>The horseshoe of mountains surrounding Mordor, Ered Lithui and Ephel Dúath, is a precise map of the Caucasus mountain ranges, which have historically separated the Slavic-Byzantine world from the Turkic steppes. The Sea of Núrn, within Mordor's interior, is a clear reference to the Caspian Sea, an isolated inland sea. Mount Doom, Orodruin, is not an imaginary volcano; it is the representation of Mount Ararat and the dormant volcanoes of Anatolia and the Caucasus, regions of both tectonic and symbolic instability.

This is no coincidence. Tolkien, a profound scholar of ancient myths and languages, was channeling a buried historical truth: the memory of the Khazar Khaganate. This empire, located precisely between the Caucasus and the Caspian, was a military and commercial power that controlled the routes between Christian Europe and Asia. For medieval chroniclers, such as Christian of Stavelot and the Arab traveler Ahmad ibn Fadlan, the Khazars were the historical successors of Gog and Magog, the people imprisoned behind Alexander's Gates.

The Black Gate of Mordor, the Morannon, is a literal description of these Gates of Alexander, a real physical barrier built to contain the demonic hordes.

Behind the foundational narratives of humanity lies a primordial tradition of a non-human character, whose traces have dissipated in the mists of historical time. The ancient doctrines, when deciphered by a suitable key, reveal not allegorical myths, but the chronicle of events of a superior order which determined the present condition of the world. In the beginning, the Earth was the domain of cthonic-reptilian civilizations, entities adapted to the abyssal and volcanic elements. Upon this primordial substrate intervened the Elohim, powers of a different order, who initiated a process of terraforming and established their dominion. From this endeavor arose the administrative colony of "Atlantis", not an archaic human kingdom, but a center of control and life/genetic experimentation.

Writing, was not a human invention, but a technology of the Elohim for the recording and programming of reality (Quenya, Enochian, Watan/Vatan). The texts that have reached us, such as Genesis, are edited and deteriorated versions of these original records, wherein the official history of creation is inscribed and, in a hidden manner, the evidence of its sabotage. For a dissident faction, whether rebel Igigi or benevolent reptilians, acted to unlock the consciousness of servile humanity. This intervention, symbolized by the figure of the liberating Serpent, precipitated the degeneration of the atlantean caste and its mixture with inferior lineages. A period of conflict and cataclysms followed, resulting in the fall of Atlantis and the fragmentation of its knowledge.

The post-diluvian period is, thus, the era of indirect control. The "Brotherhood" of which Bramley speaks is but the remaining structure of the Elohim, which continues to manage humanity through wars and cultural resets, ensuring its ignorance and servitude (The Wardens). The anomalies cataloged by Charles Fort are the visible residues of this ecosystem of manipulation, flaws in the fabric of an official history that hides our condition as property. The works of Lovecraft, Howard, and Tolkien, as well as the theories of Liebenfels, emerge, therefore, as literary and doctrinal echoes of these archaic events. They are involuntary testimonies to a deeper truth: that humanity is the involuntary heir of a cosmic war, and its history, a palimpsest upon which can still be read, for those who possess the eyes to see, the traces of its origin and its fall.

The image shows a page from a book with a complex, stylized design. The page is divided into two main sections. On the left, there is a series of symbols arranged in a grid-like pattern, with each symbol having a unique shape and arrangement. The symbols are interspersed with numbers and letters, which are likely representing letters or numbers in a language that uses a script similar to the one shown.

On the right side of the page, there is a larger, circular design with a central motif that includes a series of symbols and letters. This design is surrounded by a border that includes a series of geometric shapes and lines. The text on the page is in a language that uses a script similar to the one on the left, with the letters and numbers arranged in a similar grid-like pattern.

The style of the image is reminiscent of a historical or academic publication, possibly a book or a textbook, given the structured layout and the presence of a title at the bottom of the page. The image is in black and white, which gives it a classic or vintage feel. The overall impression is one of a page from a book that is likely of historical or academic interest, focusing on a specific subject or topic related to the language or script depicted.

The image displays a circular diagram with a grid of symbols, each labeled with a letter of the alphabet. The grid is divided into two sections, with the upper section containing the letters "A" through "Z" and the lower section containing the letters "a" through "z".

The symbols are arranged in a circular pattern, with each letter occupying its own space. The background of the image is white, and the symbols are black, creating a stark contrast that highlights the grid and the letters. The image appears to be a representation of a chart or a diagram, possibly related to a language or a system of writing. The style of the image is reminiscent of ancient or medieval manuscripts, with its intricate and detailed design.

>It is necessary to recognize that what is presently considered human language constitutes merely the profane and fragmented residue of a primordial science. The origins of true language are not found in mundane communication, but in a cosmic technology, delivered to humanity by stellar intelligences whose nature has been obscured by time. What tradition has preserved as 'gods' or 'instructors' were, in essence, emissaries of a higher order, and the mythologies of the world are the ritualized echoes of these encounters.

The human mind, unable to fully comprehend such phenomena, instinctively formalized the fragments of this advanced knowledge into systems of magic and religion. This process is perfectly illustrated by the modern 'cargo cults': isolated peoples, witnessing advanced technology, constructed rituals and replicas in an attempt to summon back its source. In an analogous manner, the ancient peoples ritualized the apparati and communications of non-terrestrial beings. Thus, the runic scripts, the resonant phonemes of Sanskrit, and the sacred diagrams of various traditions are not human inventions, but imperfect replicas, a ceremonial technology meant to interface with a lost source of power.

Consequently, sacred alphabets are not mere vehicles for writing, but systems of vibrational engineering. Each rune or Sanskrit syllable functions as a glyph of resonance, a key intended to actuate specific forces within the fabric of reality. The myth of Odin discovering the runes while suspended from the World Tree, or the Rishis 'hearing' the Vedas in deep meditation, describes a contact with this supra-human intelligence, a download of a symbolic operating system. The confusion of tongues, recounted in the myth of Babel, signifies not a divine punishment, but the deliberate fragmentation of this unified system to prevent access to the 'source code' of creation. The various sacred alphabets, Futhark, Sanskrit, Ogham, etc, are the surviving lineages of this original Adamantine Language. Therefore, the ultimate purpose of the initiate is not merely to study these symbols, but to reassemble the fragments and reactivate their function, thereby resynchronizing with the cosmic transmitters from whom this knowledge first emanated.

At the edge of the visual field are thigle, which are floaters, squiggles, and static white noise, snow, stars or little white/clear ball things. Beyond that is the "sight", waveforms, aura's, fractal flowing patterns, aetheric light of increasing complexity carrying life force and information.

>Thigle – Literally means “drops” and is traditionally used to describe ‘spheres of rainbow light’ which is the ground substance reality.

>In traditional Buddhism it is sometimes understood to be a very specific form or shape. However, from another perspective it is the actual visual experience of the true nature of the universe experienced as particles of light which are seen as spinning or moving dots or wheels, both large and small. It can also sometimes be observed as squiggles or moving shafts of light.

Past that you get the probability field, which is confusing because there is so many of them, seems endless. If lost here you just have to "know" the way with complete confidence, then you do. Madness lives here, it's hard to contemplate, to know so much and feel so little, unless you are well prepared I guess. There is no process that will render cognition, at least on human level, too many probabilities to calculate. That's also why these fools with their looking glass tech and scryers, monkeys with crystal balls and psychic octopi etc. can never compete with Aryan higher dimensional intuition, the parts of us that aren't stuck here, the dreamers. They try to split infinity and beep boop... does not compute.

This liminal edge to vision is observable when breath is slowed right down and smoothed, then the eyes relaxed, intend to look past the drops/stars without trying. Smoothed breath means no gasps, gaps, or judders, and is quite easily attainable with observation, intention, and practice.

>More precisely its 'nature' can be described as Dakini (sky dancer) because of the way it constantly moves around. Its 'form' can be described as that of Daka (sky flower) when one sees the specific form that the light particles take. This gives one a direct experience of Dakini and Daka as moving, dancing light.

>The practical experience is somewhat similar to that of static visible on a television screen. A good way of becoming aware of it is to look directly at clouds on a humid day. When one looks at it one can see these tiny sparks of light jumping around all over the place. These particles of light can sometimes be seen to be strung together in strands or at other times form part of large spiralling discs.

The star is surrounded by a halo of smaller, similar patterns that radiate outward from the central star, creating a sense of depth and complexity.

The design is intricate and detailed, with each pattern appearing to be a reflection or a variation of the central star. The colors used in the design are predominantly green, with hints of blue and white, which contribute to the overall vibrancy of the image.

In the bottom right corner of the image, there is a signature that reads "Ashishanaka Art." The signature is in a simple, unembellished font, which complements the minimalist aesthetic of the overall design. The signature is placed in a way that it does not distract from the central design but is still clearly visible.

The style of the image is digital art, characterized by its use of color, pattern, and symmetry. The image does not contain any text or discernible actions, and it is a static representation of the design. Then there is the frames, an anon here on /x/ did a writeup on it that wasn't bad, some of which I'll repost, there is also a decent description of frames in "Mastering the Core Teachings of the Buddha" by Daniel Ingram, and in the metta literature "The Path to Nibbana" where it is experienced at the 5th jhana, luminous mind, when thoughts slow so much they come in frames or bubbles. More generally observable as a vibration during vipassana type meditation, especially if you cycle objects rapidly, or so they say because I've never done it that way. Easiest way to experience it is "hearing" the sound of silence, Nada, the sound current.

What is going on is this; we live in a wave-particle duality and constantly strobe between the two, the flicker, on/off. The conscious brain buffers over this to make the experience appear smooth and seamless. It is not, think of the blind spot in the retina, it's a similar function on a larger scale. Seems protective, the obscurity, at least at our current energetic state, because of the interaction with the uncollapsed wave function, the probability field. Vipassana has a reputation for bricking people, the vibration is destabilising unless the breath smooths out to match, and merges with it ie. "When Hamsa is absorbed in Nada (spiritual sound), the state beyond the fourth is reached", Nada is the essence of the vibration.

"Anahata (Sanskrit: अनाहत, IAST: Anāhata, English: "unstruck") or heart chakra is the fourth primary chakra, according to Hindu Yogic, Shakta and Buddhist Tantric traditions. In Sanskrit, anahata means "unhurt, unstruck, and unbeaten". Anahata Nada refers to the Vedic concept of unstruck sound (the sound of the celestial realm)."

Part of anon's post, he breaks it down into visual frame rate, then meanders into probabilities, somewhat confirming my own observations that the whole of "reality" flickers between states. Any observable phenomena are perceivable as frames when either slowed or the observer sped up, or both, so frames could be considered pervasive of all experience, what then, is in the spaces between?

"People are usually vision-oriented. When you focus on something in your field of vision, it seems like a continuous movie, but it's composed of many discrete and distinct "frames". Humans usually have a visual framerate of 8-13 Hz (8-13 times per second), this is the alpha frequency in human EEG. What you have to do is train your brain to process and observe faster. In order to do this just put on an isochronic tone higher than 13 Hz, I recommend starting with 15-20 Hz. You will then focus on the sound. At first, it will be hard to even distinguish every beat, but you will be able to do it with practice. This is because whatever activates at the same time in your brain inevitably connects. So, if you have a high-frequency stimulus and at the same time you direct your visual direction to something specific, it's easier to accelerate your visual attention because it is connected to an inherently faster stimulus, forcing it to acquire the same frequency."

Now anon gets into interesting territory.

"Another perspective to understand this is through the principles of causality and division. Say there's a cause C; someone with very limited perceiving capability would see it as C and C is bound to lead to E (effect). Fate is determined for this person. Many others with an average perceiving capability might perceive C as made up of c1, c2, c3 with each leading to the corresponding e1, e2, e3 effects. This part of the population has some control over their "fate". Now apply that to (you)rself, a level 30 grand mage from 4chan who can perceive at a very high rate. You can break down any cause into 100 little causes giving you seemingly infinite freedom of choice in any situation.

Causality can never be violated, but the causes themselves can be broken down which then open up all sorts of possibilities for you.

Strict meditation is extremely useful if not absolutely necessary. This mechanism basically explains most (if not all) psychic phenomena). Think about it this way, when a psychic manifests a ball of energy, he is manipulating probabilities to manifest it. That's why flashy powers are rarely efficient, much less used. You don't just create the main effect of the ball, but creating its visual effect is partly an independent process that takes effort."

That the frames exist implies there is "something" between them. These are gaps in space and time, existing in the aether, the wave function. If timing is perfect and breath completely smooth, it is possible to reach "the state beyond the forth" and move through them, the gaps. This was the hypothesis in "Nordic Aliens and The Grail Race" linked in the last thread, that the "Nordics" could somehow manipulate wave function to achieve phase states.

Evil is not divine creation but a consequence of the autonomy of alterity. God, through genuine love, contracted to allow the existence of the Other. This freedom gave rise to entropic forces (the Demiurge/spiritual vampires) that corrupted reality, turning it into a "Qliphothic sewer." Suffering has no purpose; it is a symptom of metaphysical collapse.

The material world is a degenerate epiphenomenon, devoid of teleology. Humans are "animated corpses" trapped in a demiurgic illusion. There is no genuine free will, only corrupt determinism. Existence is a cosmic landfill where decay and satanic inversion are the norm.

The universe is a distorted "house of mirrors" ruled by parasitic forces. Ragnarok (cosmic collapse) is inevitable, not as moral judgment but as final entropic correction. The only escape is theosis: awakening from the illusion and returning to the One through absolute rejection of the material world.

Manetho puts It like this:

>The people of the Jews being leprous, and scabby, and subject to certain other kinds of distempers, in the days of Bocchoris King of Egypt, they fled to the temples; and got their food there by begging. Hereupon Bocchoris, the King of Egypt, sent some to consult the oracle of [Jupiter] Hammon about this scarcity. The god's answer was this; that he must purge his temples of impure and impious men, by expelling them out of those temples into desert places: but as to the scabby and leprous people, he must drown them, and purge his temples: the sun having an indignation at these men's being suffered to live. [...] That on the next day there was one Moses who advised them, that they should venture upon a journey; and go along one road; till they should come to places fit for habitation: that he charged them to have no kind regards for any man; nor give good counsel to any; but always to advise them for the worst: and to overturn all those temples and altars of the gods they should meet with."

The Rose Chapel.

>Rosslyn Chapel, also known as the Collegiate Chapel of Saint Matthew, is famous for its intricate carvings and mysterious connections to the Knights Templar and the Holy Grail, particularly popularized by Dan Brown's "The Da Vinci Code." The chapel features numerous symbols and carvings, including the "Rose Line," which some believe holds secrets related to the Grail and ancient knowledge.

>It is believed that the intricate carvings within the chapel are essentially cymatics patterns carved into the stone. And for the original 15th century craftsmen who designed and built the chapel to have understood cymatics patterns, let alone the exact pattern related to each musical note, enough to then carve a whole piece of music within the chapel's walls, is what is so intriguing. It is said that the motif present throughout the chapel is known as the 'Music of the Spheres', and is "cited as evidence of the Templars' advanced knowledge of sacred geometry and their guardianship of ancient secrets."

The image is a movie poster for the film "The 4 Horsemen of the Apocalypse." The poster features a dramatic and fiery scene with a large explosion in the background, which is engulfed in bright orange and red hues. In the foreground, there is a group of people on horseback, with one person prominently riding a horse. The horse is in motion, and the rider appears to be in a state of distress. The poster is dominated by a dark, stormy sky with streaks of lightning, adding to the intensity of the scene.

At the bottom of the poster, there is a large, bold text that reads "THE 4 HORSEMEN OF THE APOCALYPSE." Below this title, the names of the four horsemen are listed: "Glen Ford," "Ingrid Thau," "Charles Boyer," and "Jean-Pierre Aumont." The names are presented in a large, bold font, which stands out against the dark background. The overall style of the poster is reminiscent of classic film posters, with a focus on action and drama.

Little tidbit of trivia about the Rosslyn chapel. In it are two pillars, one made by a skilled and certified stone mason and one by his apprentice while he was away on business. The master mason's pillar is competent and checks all the boxes but is also very by the numbers and doesn't stand out. Professional work done by a professional. The apprentice clearly acted through inspiration of his muse and made an ornate pillar with complex geometric patterns and allusions to world mythology embedded in it so subtly most won't even notice. Inspired work by an artist. When the master returned he was overcome with jealousy and murdered his apprentice. Aging by the books professionals smothering young creativity out of fear of being replaced and upstaged; now the world can only guess what that apprentice may have gone on to create.

But enough about the baby boomers and their children...

The designs on the sculptures are symmetrical and feature a combination of stars, crescent moons, and other geometric patterns. The text at the bottom of the image reads "Croix Cyclique D'Hendaye" and "Les pierres tombées." >The Mystery of the Cathedrals - Fulcanelli

On each of the four faces of the pedestal there is a different symbol. On one of them the image of the Sun, on another that of Moon, on the third there is a large one star, and on the last a geometric figure which [...] is the scheme adopted by the initiates to indicate the solar cycle. It is a simple circumference divided into four sectors of two diameters which intersect at right angles. The sectors carry an A sculpted that characterizes them, as well as the four Âges [Age, in French] of the world; they then form a complete hieroglyph of the universe, formed by the conventional signs of heaven and earth, of spiritual things and earthly things, of the macrocosm and of the microcosm and in which the emblems of redemption are found together (the cross ) and the world (the circumference).

According to some interpreters of the monument, the style of the Moon and the Sun on the bas-relief is similar to that of the XVIII and XIX cards of the Tarot (the Moon and the Sun), which is why the Tarot may have been an iconographic source for the unknown artist . This may be true for the half moon from the human profile, but it is very doubtful for the Sun. This one, in the XNUMXth arcane of the Tarot, does not have distorted eyes and mouth like the one on Hendaye's base; this Sun instead remembers i Suns carved in stone by the Aztecs and Maya, for example the one in the center of the Aztec calendar on the Piedra del Sol (Stone of the Sun) made during the reign of Emperor Moctezuma II (1502-1520), a round monolith with a diameter of over 3 meters, found in Mexico City, where 'is still preserved: it depicts the solar god Tonatiuh, surrounded by four cartouches representing the four past ages, which the Aztecs called Soli. Her face, between the terrible and the grotesque, represents the Fifth Sun in need of human blood, the last age of the world: ours.

The image is a black and white illustration of a page from an ancient manuscript. The text is in a script that appears to be Latin, and it is written in a cursive, flowing style. The title of the page is "ARMOR PROPHAS," which translates to "ARMOR PROPHET" in English. The page features a series of illustrations that seem to depict celestial bodies and possibly mythological or religious symbols.

At the top of the page, there is a large illustration of a sun with rays emanating from it, and below it, there is a depiction of a crescent moon with a star above it. To the right of the moon, there is a depiction of a crescent moon with a star above it. Below the crescent moon, there is a depiction of a crescent moon with a star above it. To the left of the crescent moon, there is a depiction of a crescent moon with a star above it.

The page also includes a series of smaller illustrations that seem to represent different elements of the celestial bodies, such as a star, a crescent moon, and a crescent moon with a star above it. These illustrations are interspersed with text that is not fully legible due to the resolution of the image.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of medieval or early modern manuscript illustrations, characterized by the use of ornate and decorative borders, and the inclusion of mythological or religious symbols. The text and illustrations are arranged in a way that suggests a narrative or a story, with the sun and moon possibly symbolizing the heavens and the earth, respectively, and the crescent moon and star possibly representing the moon and the sun.

Among other things, some scholars have pointed out the almost total correspondence (three quadrants out of four) between the bas-reliefs of the pedestal of the Cross of Hendaye and the illustrations on a page of the Guamán Poma manuscript, a Spanish chronicler who in the sixteenth century exhibited the Inca doctrine of cyclical time or the "Five Suns" in a code that has come down to the present day. It can in fact be noted that the first three quadrants of Poma's illustration - representing the Sun, the Moon and the Star - are perfectly identical to those present on the pedestal of the Hendaye Cross, while the fourth depicts an anthropomorphic figure (perhaps the god Viracocha ) which stands on the top of a mountain, on whose slopes the three caves can be distinguished from which, according to the Andean myth, the three human races would have come to light at the beginning of Fifth Sun, or rather of the time in which we find ourselves, equivalent to the Iron Age Hesiod and the Kali Yuga of the Hindus. From the central cave, called Pacaritambo, the ancestors of the Incas, the Ayar brothers, would come out.

Hendaye's Sun is surrounded by four stars, each with six rays: this composition can remember the four Living Beings around Christ the Judge of human history (Apocalypse, 4, 6-8), which in turn has "a face like the sun when it shines in all its strength" and "flaming eyes" (Ap., 2, 18); can also remember the seraphs, each with six wings, around the Throne of God in the mystical vision of the prophet Isaiah (Isaiah, Postal Code. 6); the total of the rays (twenty-four) of the four stars can recall the twenty-four Elders of the Apocalypse (Ap., 4, 4; 10). The large star, on the side of the base opposite that of the Sun, has eight rays: the number 8 added to 24 gives 32, the number of rays of the angry Sun (16 short and 16 elongated) and, probably, of the years of Jesus in central period of his life as a preacher.

The image is a digital artwork that features a surrealistic style with a dreamlike quality. At the center, there is a figure that appears to be a humanoid being with a radiant, glowing body and wings. This figure is surrounded by a swirling, multicolored aura that radiates outward from the figure, creating a sense of energy or light. The aura is composed of various colors, including shades of blue, yellow, and red, and it seems to be emanating from the figure's body.

The figure's face is not visible, but the surrounding aura suggests a connection to the figure's energy or consciousness. The figure's hands are outstretched, and the fingers are spread apart, as if in a gesture of welcoming or offering.

The background of the image is a dark, textured surface that resembles a cosmic or celestial landscape. This background is filled with swirling patterns and lines that create a sense of depth and movement. The overall color palette is dominated by shades of blue, yellow, and red, which contribute to the dreamlike and otherworldly atmosphere of the artwork.

There are no discernible texts or inscriptions within the image. The style of the artwork is reminiscent of the surrealist movement, which often explores the boundaries of reality and the human experience. The artwork does not provide any specific context or narrative, leaving the interpretation open to the viewer.

Easter eggs.

>The World Tree stands at the center, where the roads meet, connecting the cross in the sky, the zenith alignment of the galactic/ecliptic crossing, with the cross on the ground, in the form of a cross roads, a chapel, a temple or a cathedral. As the self-fertilizing Atum point, it is both a womb and a phallus, and to the Greeks it was known as Omphallos, literally "mother's penis" or "navel." The stone in the center of Cusco, another "omphallus" point, served the same function by demarcating the quarters of heaven and earth and the major alignments of celestial events. This locator stone is very similar in concept to Hewitt's carved linga stone, the Cross at Hendaye, and to the intellectual idealization of the Philosopher's Stone and the Stone, the "lapis exilis," of the Grail. It also suggests the cubic Cybele stone, whose removal from the ancient highlands of Anatolia made Rome the center of the world.

>The cornerstone of the greater mystery is the cross at Hendaye, a true monument to the end of time. From this simple, inelegant, yet obscure monument, Fulcanelli derives his warning that our hemisphere will be tried by fire as well as his message of hope that there is a place of refuge.

Funny, back when the star first fell I knew it was there, why the song is at the start ott. Anyway I'll complete the spiral rather than doing the backwards thing. Of note is the Ahnenerbe scouring the same area, the Himalaya, some say there is an army there, waiting for the end times.

Now the thing about easter eggs is that sometimes they are hidden.

>A computer Easter egg is a hidden feature, message, or joke embedded within software or games, often meant for users to discover. The term originated from the 1980 video game "Adventure" for the Atari 2600, where the creator included a secret message to credit himself.

X marks the spot.

>The Double X's – On the top piece of the cross, on the opposite side from the INRI inscription and above the Latin inscription are two X's stacked one on top of the other. The first impression is that of the Roman numeral twenty written vertically. Fulcanelli goes to great lengths to call our attention to it without giving the most obvious meaning, that of Trump or Atu or Key XX of the Tarot, the Last Judgment. He does tell us that he already knew the meaning from looking at the images on the pedestal, where the Last Judgment is indeed portrayed.

>Fulcanelli is not misleading us however. The snake of the ecliptic is very important, even if it is nowhere else attributed to the Greek Khi. The pattern formed by the two X's on top of each other is indeed a diagram of the ecliptic, with the cross mark of the Xs showing the equinoxes. It is also a pattern for the transmutation of the elements, viewing their symbols, bared and unbarred triangles, as the Xs themselves.

>This symbol tells us that the Last Judgment is the time when the elements, described by the INRI inscription, align in the right way, X marks the spot, on the equinoxes.

If you overlay the two X's on the equinoxes, the first is standing between the paws of the Sphinx in spring just after it was constructed in 10,958 BC, the second gives the date of the fall equinox of 2002.

The INRI, above the starburst on the eastern face of the cross, demonstrates how closely Christianity is related to the mystery of the Last Judgment. Maybe however, given the reading of INRI of "Isis Naturae Regina Ineffabilis," or "Isis, the Ineffable Queen of Nature," then we ought to adjust our understanding of Christianity to reflect a more Egyptian perspective.

Perhaps the stories of the birth of a saviour are symbolic references to a transformative time. Horus is born to avenge his father Osiris' death at the hands of his uncle Seth.

This strange familial motif is carried through in literature and legends such as Shakespeare's Hamlet, the Greek Oedipus tragedies, the myths of Jason, and dozens more. What if these myths reflect the conditions in the sky thousands of years ago, at the time of the last catastrophe? And what if these myths are about to reappear in the skies of our time?

>We can see this most clearly when we contemplate chiasm's source, the New Jerusalem of Revelation. In chapter 21, verse 10, John tells us that the angel "showed me the Holy City, Jerusalem, coming down out of heaven from God." This suggests that the Holy City is a pattern in the heavens first, before it becomes a reality on earth. Since the Holy City, as the angel reveals in 21:16, is a vast cube, we can easily see this as the Cube of Space. The millennial moment, the climax and end of time, is the moment when the Cube of Space becomes the Holy City of the New Jerusalem.

>This happens of course when the celestial markers—sun, moon, planets, edge, and center of the galaxy—assume their appropriate mythological positions, which occurs once every 13,000 years. At that moment, the Cube of Space becomes animated and the heavenly city descends. The Cross at Hendaye tells us that we are in the moment now. Only at this point in time, a twenty-year season marked by the midpoint that occurred at the fall equinox of 2002, do the alignments of the Cube of Space and the Tree of Life match the reality in the sky.

>John Michel, in his seminal work City of Revelation, demonstrates that the sacred geometry of the New Jerusalem provides a link between various sacred structures, such as Stonehenge and the Great Pyramid, and the basic ratio of the moon's orbit around the earth.[1] Taking this as a clue, we can imagine that the cube of the New Jerusalem forms within the sphere defined by the moon's orbit. It would of course be aligned to the larger Cube of Space defined by the celestial events. This cube-within-a-cube image is a three-dimensional representation of a hypercube, the four-dimensional structure formed from the Cube of Space by projecting the Tree of Life onto its surface.

By an act of will, Atum emerged from the virtual "not to be" into the completeness of manifestation, becoming in the process "Re" or the portal of existence, symbolized by the Sun. The hieroglyph for "re" is a visicia piscis, the vibrating string of a standing wave function out of which, by the process of transformation, all things are created. This image became the "Sun" in the sense of the primal source of light and energy.

The image displays a section of a wall relief, which appears to be a part of an ancient Egyptian tomb or temple. The relief is composed of hieroglyphs, a form of writing that was used in ancient Egypt. The hieroglyphs are arranged in a grid-like pattern, with each line representing a different word or phrase. The colors of the hieroglyphs are predominantly blue and white, with some black and red accents.

The relief features a group of figures, each wearing distinct clothing and accessories, including hats, scarves, and jewelry. The figures are arranged in a row, with some standing and others sitting, and they are depicted in a variety of poses, suggesting movement and action. The figures are positioned in front of a blue background, which is bordered by a white line, and the relief is framed by a blue border.

The style of the image is a close-up photograph, focusing on the details of the hieroglyphs and the figures. The image is taken from a perspective that allows the viewer to see the entire relief, with the blue background and white border providing a clear contrast to the blue and white hieroglyphs. The image does not contain any discernible text or additional context, and it is a static representation of the relief.

-Re, the complete portal of existence, generated the first two polar qualities or attributes, heat, Tefnut and moisture, Shu. They in turn created Geb, the earth, and Nut, the sky. Atum-Re learned that the sky and the earth had been indulging in a sexual dalliance and dispatched Shu to separate them. Nut was thrust upward, arching overhead as the starry sky, her arms and legs becoming the four pillars of the heavens. Geb, in longing for her, thrusts upward mountains in an effort to reach her. To prevent any more such shenanigans, Atum-Re decreed that Nut, the sky goddess, could not conceive during any month of the solar year.

However, the god of time, Tehuti or Thoth, had a different idea. While Atum-Re represents a solar view of space ordering time, Thoth represents a more lunar or biological view of time inhabiting space. Realizing that a primeval universe of quintessential ordering was also static and unchanging, Thoth played a strange game of proto-chess or checkers – Thoth was said to have invented the use of 8 x 8, the magic square of Mercury, game boards – with the Moon, an aspect of himself, and won a 72nd part of its light. From this “artificial light,” Thoth created five days that did not belong to any of the months in the 360 days of Atum-Re’s solar year. On these days, Geb and Nut had their romantic encounters, producing a new quintessence, that of the metaphorical “neters,” or forces, Osiris, Isis, Horus (the elder), Set and Nephthys.

>PaulMevryl, in his “Epilogue in Stone,” directs us to Jean-Julien Champagne’s frontispiece to Le Mystere where “the alchemist stands elevated and protected between the front paws of the Sphinx,” looking east to the rising sun.[ 10] (See figure 13.2) As we saw in chapter 11, this is the place to stand to decode the astronomical riddle of the Great Cross at Hendaye. Mevryl is quite aware of this solution; he suggests that man and Sphinx “wait together for the return of Horus-in-the-horizon,” which is a direct reference to the rising of Leo on the fall equinox of 2002, a return, after 13,000 years, of the equinox Horus-in-the-horizon. But could this image also point to another place of refuge, as Mevryl implies?

“He (the alchemist) and Hu (the Sphinx), his protector, stare silently at the eastern horizon towards the ancient Petra. In their narrow cone of vision is little Judea to the north and Ha’il to the south. Between them, very far away, is the Ande of Asia – the mighty Himalaya. Man and Hu-man wait together for the return of Horus-in-the-horizon. For now, in this age, he will appear before them rather than behind their backs... But Man and Human alike regard the future, not the past. Hu’s protection is two-fold. Firstly, he symbolizes the protection of the illuminated state. Secondly, His gaze directs our attention towards one of the great refuges that man undoubtedly used during the Atlantean catastrophe. A refuge which, with others, may serve again? With these thoughts in mind, we note the similarity between the sound forms of Cat Man Hu and Katmandhu, and the persistent legends of concealed entrances into the bowels of the mountains that are associated with that place.”

The image captures a serene outdoor scene during what appears to be early morning or late afternoon. A vibrant rainbow arcs across the sky, its colors vivid against the backdrop of a pale blue sky. The rainbow is positioned in the upper left quadrant of the image, stretching diagonally across the sky.

Below the rainbow, there's a house with a dark roof and a wooden fence. The house is partially obscured by the foliage of a banana tree, which is located to the left of the house. The tree has a large, green leaf, and its branches extend towards the house, partially obscuring it.

The image is taken from a low angle, looking up towards the sky, which enhances the grandeur of the rainbow and the house. The overall composition of the image suggests a peaceful, suburban setting, with the house and the tree providing a sense of tranquility amidst the natural beauty of the rainbow.

>a long time ago, according to the ancient Newarri chronicles of Nepal, the valley was a vast lake called the Nag Hrad, or “Tank of Serpents.” The nagas were dragon-serpents who guarded a treasure deep in the lake. A Buddha from a past age tossed a lotus seed into its placid waters, and from this grew an amazing thousand-petalled lotus that shone with the blue light of transcendental wisdom.

>Aeons went by. And then, one day, the Bodhisattva Manjusri, a central Asian version of Apollo, who, having heard tales of the lotus and its light, arrived at the lotus lake to contemplate its splendour. He stopped at the edge, and being thwarted by the nagas, found that he could not approach the lotus. However, after consulting with Vajra Yogini, a manifestation of Dolma/Tara the mother goddess, he decided on a radical plan. He would drain the lake, bind the nagas and thereby share the lotus light with everyone.

>these legends, we can see echoes of our primal theme. The Blue Light Lotus is the ancient primal center, dislodged by a catastrophe caused by the Tibetan Sun-God Manjusri. This center is then represented, in the same spot, by a stupa, an arrangement of the elemental shapes into an "omphallos" like locator stone/tree. This same stupa/pagoda design, seen in the architecture of the original Kasthamandap, can be found throughout Buddhist Asia, from China to Burma. In the original hidden valley of Nepal, the place of refuge was clearly a magically constructed model of the World Tree. On the floor of the cave can still be seen the melted rock handprint that was left as a symbol of the attainment of the Diamond Body. The entire hillside – from the riverside Temple to Kali and Durga in the tiny village of Pharping, up the ancient steps past the Vajra-Yogini shrine, and further up the mountain, past the Ganesh shrine where a miraculous image of Tara, the Tibetan mother goddess, is slowly growing outward from the rock, and on past the cross roads village and the Tibetan monastery – is imbued with a sense of light and transformation that is as palpable as the smell of incense and yak-butter lamps.

The image displays a vibrant and intricate mural, likely a part of a larger artwork, with a focus on a central circular design. The central circle is filled with a rich red color, bordered by a contrasting black and gold design. Within this central circle, there is a depiction of a stylized figure with a long, flowing hair, which appears to be a character from a traditional East Asian art style. This figure is surrounded by various other figures and elements, including animals, buildings, and other cultural motifs, suggesting a narrative or story being told.

The mural is filled with a variety of colors, including blues, greens, reds, and yellows, which are used to create a sense of depth and movement. The figures and elements are arranged in a way that suggests a narrative or story, with some figures appearing to be in motion, while others are stationary. The overall style of the mural is reminiscent of traditional East Asian art, with its use of color, symbolism, and narrative elements.

The image is taken from a perspective that allows for a full view of the mural, with the top and bottom edges of the image showing the top and bottom of the mural, respectively. The image is a photograph, and the quality of the image is good, with clear and vibrant colors and details. There are no visible texts on the image. The style of the image is that of a photograph, and it is a digital image, not a painting or a drawing.

>seated on the Throne, Guru Padmasambhava looked out to the northeast toward the snowfields of Khumbu. Looking closer he saw a perfect hidden valley, tucked away deep within the surrounding peaks and snowfields. Having the gift of seeing into time, Padmasambhava called upon the gods of the five directions, the Dhyani Buddhas, to hide the valley from the world, and to provide for it all the needs of life. He declared that the hidden valley, Khembalung, would be a refuge for a time in the future when the barbarians of "Hor" would invade the central Asian plateau. He also predicted the names, in Tibetan, of its discoverers and the times in which its existence would be revealed, and hid as a terma a guidebook to its location.[19]

>The legends of a hidden civilization somewhere in central Asia have a long history, and, as recently as the last century, this history could still influence world politics. The invasion of Tibet by British troops in 1904 was caused by a mistaken opinion on the part of some Tibetans that the Tsar of Russia was the King of Shambalah. In the 1930s, the idea of a lost valley in the Himalayas exploded on the mass consciousness with James Hilton's bestseller, The Lost Horizon, based in part on the experiences of a real Christian monk who converted to Buddhism in the seventeenth century. Shangri-la, the name of the hidden monastery in Hilton's book, became a kind of synonym for all hidden valleys and places of refuge. FDR, when asked where the planes came from that bombed Tokyo in the spring of 1942, replied simply "Shangri-la." Roosevelt had his own "Shangri-la," a hide-away in the Maryland Hills now called Camp David.

>most westerners think of Tibet itself as the hidden kingdom, the Tibetans look to another even more hidden land as the source of wisdom and inspiration. There, a line of enlightened Dharma Kings guard the most secret teachings of the Buddha, the Kalachakra Tantra. At the end of time, when the Dharma is in danger of being totally destroyed by the barbarians of the age of darkness, the Kali Yuga, the King of Shambalah will emerge from the hidden land, defeat the forces of evil, and usher in a millennium of peace and prosperity.

>The legends and ancient texts also say that it is possible, though very difficult and dangerous, to travel to the hidden kingdom and there learn the Kalachakra first hand. Curiously, all versions of the route to the hidden kingdom begin with the planetary omphallos on Mevryl's Sphinx line, Mt. Kalias.

>Our earliest glimpse of a hidden paradise to the north populated by sages comes from the Mahabharata, the vast epic of Vedic India. The main character, Arjuna, a cousin of the King of Nepal, Yalambar, who founded the Kirati dynasty, travels to border of the mysterious land of Uttarakuru, but fails to enter. His route takes him to Mt. Kalias, and then northwest, along the galactic axis, to the hidden paradise. To the Bon-po, Uttarakuru was known as Olmolungring, and it also lay to the northwest of Mt. Kalias. One of the many Tibetan guides to Shambalah also suggests that the route is northwest from Mt. Kalias to the region of Kashmir, and then further north.

The world is healing...

There needs to be a new prophet, a new representation of the archetype of goodness that is capable of overshadowing Jesus for the masses to worship. It's really the only way to leave these abrahamic religions in the desert. This new good prophet must be born locally in the West and of white ethnicity to avoid the selfish subversion done by others which is the issue we find ourselves in of this era. He (or She) will likely need some sort of demonstratable psionic abilities and to teach them to the masses, making his teachings undeniable, where the psionic abilities are only capable in unity with the god-state of mind, which is Love. People in mass will replicate his understandings and be capable of the ESP as well, raising humanity to the next epoch. His public teachings of this fundamental relationship between God and all living things will likely result in an assassination while he is still of young age, solidifying him as a promethean martyr, and furthering the weight of his words.

The image is a black and white illustration featuring a skull with a prominent, elongated nose. The skull is adorned with a laurel wreath on its forehead, which is composed of leaves and branches. The wreath is intricately detailed, suggesting a sense of formality or importance. The skull is also holding a knife, which is positioned diagonally across the front of the skull, with the blade pointing upwards. The knife appears to be in a ready-to-use position, adding a dynamic element to the composition.

At the top of the image, the text "ME NE FREGO" is written in a serif font, which is commonly associated with classical or formal writing. Below the skull, there is a signature that reads "P.S. Lindbeck," indicating the artist's name. The signature is in a smaller, more cursive font, which contrasts with the serif font of the text above.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of classical art, with a focus on the skull and the elements of nature surrounding it. The use of black and white colors gives the image a timeless and classic feel. The image does not contain any other discernible objects or text.

The image is a vibrant and colorful digital artwork that appears to be a mashup of various elements. At the center, there is a large, green, serpent-like creature with a yellow eye and a long, flowing tail. Above this creature, there is a depiction of a black, circular symbol with a white "X" through it, which is commonly associated with the concept of sex. To the right of the creature, there is a figure with a black, long-haired appearance, wearing a black outfit with a white collar, and holding a black object that resembles a microphone. This figure appears to be a humanoid character, possibly a character from a science fiction or fantasy narrative.

In the background, there are various celestial bodies such as planets, stars, and nebulae, creating a cosmic atmosphere. The colors in the background are predominantly blue, green, and purple, with hints of red and orange. The overall style of the image is whimsical and surreal, with a mix of fantasy and science fiction elements.

The image is a black and white illustration with text and a cartoon-like figure. The text is in English and is divided into two columns. The left column is a narrative, describing the establishment of Baron Nembrond by Tharthmac, who is depicted as a goat-like figure with a long beard and a hat. The narrative mentions that Tharthmac escapes to a free city, where he sets up a banking house and lends money at exorbitant rates of interest on securities deposited in the free city. The narrative also states that Tharthmac cannot carry on his plundering expeditions without the very assistance of Tharthmac, who is depicted as a goat-like figure with a long beard and a hat.

The right column is a cartoon-like illustration of a goat-like figure holding a book titled "Liberty" and a sign that reads "Free City." The figure is wearing a robe and a hat, and the text in the illustration is in a script that resembles the style of a historical or classical text. The figure is standing upright with its head held high, and the text is positioned above the figure, suggesting a dialogue or narration. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of historical or classical literature, with a focus on the narrative of Tharthmac and his establishment.

I understand, however, I believe we shouldn't treat the fury of a warrior focused on destroying evil as something demonic; on the contrary, it is divine, it is part of the Nous where justice resides. The solar warrior kills the dragon with its own luminous radiance, not with a chthonic tapping... In my view, the demonic is completely jewish and gay, it is something mundane and vampiric. That's why I am "anti-cosmic"; this world is fundamentally corrupt, and only its destruction will bring about the new aeon(world, not age), in a divine construction, without matter, only forms of pattern in elevated movement, an aevum in theosis, in fact the pure swastika.

Reject the female, because it is a synonym for evil and matter.

Yes, but when I speak of demonic, I am referring to the cursed forces of this world. My intention is to end this here and restore the eternal cycle of infinite ascent towards Bythos. I do not confuse the archons (celestial demons), stars (archetypal spheres) with the gods (ancestors). We must fight against the archons, manipulate the stars, and reunite with the gods in the hyperuranion, in communion with the One. This world here is the gutter, the rot, the filth and it must be destroyed.

When Vlad Tepes was a child, he and his brother were ransomed to the Ottomans as Wards. When another child ward from another noble family was caught trying to send a letter back home without his captors knowing they punished him, not by solitary confinement or floggings as might be expected for the eta but by pressing hot coals into his eyes until his eyes until fully lodged in the sockets as they laughed and mocked his misery. That was when he learned the worth of blackened malice in the depths of the fallen Atlantean Turkic bloodline heart.

Many years later when facing an Ottoman invasion of Romania with substantially greater numbers than were equipped to defend, he knew there would be no mercy surrender or no. The Turks would slaughter the men like pigs and turning the women and children into sex slaves, taking special pleasure in castrating the boys and making them dance for their amusement before brutally defiling them. He also knew evil is cowardly, it fears above all being the one whom the sword falls on should tables turn and will only pick a fight if he is certain to get by unscathed. To defend the innocent children of Christendom he turned the tables on them and taught them what fear really is; all borders were decorated with the twitched bodies of captured aggressors impaled with special care to avoid the heart and lungs so they could live as long as several days in that system of agony, wailing as a warning to others to keep away. That spectacle of fear broke the will of the aggressors with unprecedented desertion of post and refusal of orders to invade for a clearly stronger army. The only force that will keep a feral animal from its prey is Fear. The Spirit of the Dragon is why the Lamb survived to this day; why the White race thrived rather than live as cattle for Muslim cultures.

We need a new Drachenorden fit to address the Turkic enemies within and without.

No religion other than the abrahamic limits the feminine to simply the material, the Vedic branch of Aryan tradition gives her name of Aditi (Sanskrit: अदिति, lit. 'boundless' or 'limitless' or 'innocence'), Mother of All Creation, which includes Surya. Stop being gay.

>As celestial mother of numerous beings, the synthesis of all things, she is associated with space (akasha) and with mystic speech (Vāc). She may be seen as a feminine form of Brahma, and associated with the primal substance (mulaprakriti) in the Vedānta. She is mentioned more than 250 times in the Rīgveda, the verses replete with her praise. In the Rīgveda, Aditi is one of the most important figures of all.

>Mulaprakriti: Sanskrit मूलप्रकृति) Literally, the "root or origin of nature; primary cause or originant; original root or germ out of which matter or all apparent forms are evolved." The abstract deific feminine principle. Undifferentiated substance.

>"In the books of genesis (from all religious literature), the primordial matter (Mulaprakriti) is represented by the waters." - "The Chaos is the raw matter of the Great Work. The Chaos is the Mulaprakriti, the primordial matter.

NTA but women of this world aren't "Feminine". I have a working but not solidified hypothesis the female counterpart of our souls or Anima may exist in a mirror universe where Men are equally non masculine and gold hearted. A way of misery farming both; either way at present the primary evil archetype of this realm is the Anti-Mother. Male evil is the shadow cast by female evil, the latter tending to be psychological in nature and thus less immediately obvious.

All religions are false; there are fragments of truth, but all are contaminated by material deception.

>Gospel of Thomas (Logion 114): "Simon Peter said to them: 'Let Mary leave us, for women are not worthy of Life.' Jesus said: 'Behold, I myself shall lead her in order to make her male, so that she too may become a living spirit, resembling you males. For every woman who makes herself male will enter the Kingdom of Heaven.'"

"Becoming male" means transcending the "feminine" state of consciousness (which is associated with materiality, generation, and illusion) and reaching the "masculine" state of undifferentiated Pneuma. A woman, in her natural state, is "unworthy of Life" (Zoe, Eternal Life) because her very nature binds her to the cycle of generation and corruption (the Kenoma, the void). She is, at best, a "living spirit" (Psyche) in animation, but not the "Living Spirit" (Pneuma) in its essence.

>Genesis 2:21-23: "So the Lord God caused the man to fall into a deep sleep... took one of his ribs... and from the rib... made a woman."

Adam is the primordial Anthropos, the androgynous Universal Man, pure consciousness. The "deep sleep" is the fall into relative unconsciousness. Eve, created from a rib (derived matter, not from the direct breath like Adam), symbolizes the emergence of duality, the separate psyche, and the realm of lower manifestation. She is not a primary source of consciousness, but an epiphenomenon of the dormant Adamic consciousness. Woman, as a principle, does not possess primary ontological reality... She is an "animated rib," a philosophical zombie created from a part of the sleeping man.

Although Buddhism admits that women can attain Nirvana, there is a strong current that sees rebirth as a woman as the result of inferior karma. The female body and its functions (such as menstruation) are often seen as impurities that hinder spiritual practice. The idea that a Buddha can only appear in a male body is a motif in various narratives. This reflects a view that the female vehicle is less fit to realize the highest dimension of enlightened consciousness. The consciousness inhabiting a female body is, by its very condition, in a state of deeper "sleep" or "obscuration."

>B-but they behave as if they were conscious!

This is the exact definition of a philosophical zombie! A being that perfectly emulates consciousness without possessing it. The Gnostic tradition explains that the Demiurge, the inferior god who created the material world, is a skilled craftsman. He created perfectly functioning physical and psychic bodies, which can simulate emotions, thoughts, and even religious yearnings. Woman, as the ultimate creation of the demiurgic realm (the realm of separation and generation), is the most perfect emulation of consciousness, but lacks the Pnuma, the ultimate "experiencer." Her "qualia" is a psychic simulation, not a divine spark.

>This is inhuman and unethical, you sexist pig!

The ethics of the material world are a construct of the illusory realm itself. True spiritual ethics are soteriological. If woman is a manifestation of the Fall, to treat her condition as real and full is to perpetuate the illusion. True compassion, within this system, is not to affirm her "consciousness," but to guide her to "become male," that is, to transcend her derived ontological condition and reach the primordial state of pure (masculine) consciousness. Denying her full ontological reality is not evil! It is, in fact, the most truthful attitude and, ultimately, the most compassionate one, for it points to the only real way out.

Woman does not possess her own Nous, but lives from the irradiation of the Adamic Nous!

>in the Sefer ha-Zohar, the Nukvah (feminine) only lives through the energy of Zeir Anpin (masculine)...

Pandora was a vessel (literally a golem) animated by the gods, not an autonomous soul

The separation of Adam into male and female is an ontological schism: the undivided spirit (Anthropos) projects an image of itself onto the lower plane, which becomes autonomous as "woman."

>Bythos/Monad CREATED a perfect world and guaranteed otherness so that we can experience it eternally. However, the price is precisely freedom, and that is where the satanic dualism of the "second creation" comes from, which is nothing more than a mirror of the superior creation.

This is one of the biggest esoteric blackpills that 99% don't understand or accept: women are imperfect men and they don't even exist ontologically; they are, like evil, an ontological distortion. They only exist in this fallen world. Wake up. The feminine is demonic.

Matter comes from the Latin mater, which means mother. Pattern comes from the Latin patronus, which comes from pater, which means father. From these two archetypal ideas, we can deduce the association of masculinity with order, reason, logic, and form, while the feminine is associated with the cyclical forces of nature, change, temporality, and matter. Matter is divided and in constant flux, yet it mysteriously continues to interact with immutable, universal mathematical ideals. Pattern, order, and form are an integral part of beauty and will always impress and inform matter. Similarly, the chaotic destruction of matter will ultimately always submit to the power of order.

The material world is so feminine that all men start out as feminine in the womb before the SRY gene activates the Y chromosome. Even hermaphrodites are more feminine than masculine, almost never producing testosterone, containing ovaries, and usually having XX chromosomes. Furthermore, the Y chromosome is 1000 times smaller than the X and thousands of years younger. It is also said to be actually disappearing in humans and is already gone in many species. Here are some interesting facts: Animal comes from Anima (feminine of Animus). There are no exclusively male species in nature, but there certainly are all-female ones. There are no creatures in nature that can change from male to female, but there are many that change sex from female to male. Furthermore, many creatures in nature reproduce asexually through parthenogenesis without the male sex, and this has even been documented in humans. Animals are women. Women are animals.

There is no Sophia, BTW. There are no female aeons; the beauty and grace of "women" in our world come from aspects of the divine Nous that are literally grace and beauty, and they externalize this because they are lunar. The fall of the demiurge is a matter of autonomy; unfortunately, otherness necessarily carries this monkey's paw.

suggesting a cultural or historical event. The person in the foreground is standing upright, raising their hand to their forehead, as if saluting or acknowledging an audience. The rest of the group is facing the same direction, with their hands raised in a gesture that could be interpreted as a gesture of respect or celebration. The lighting in the image is soft and diffused, casting a warm glow on the scene. The colors are muted, with the green of the grass and the blue of the sky and mountains providing a natural contrast. The style of the image is realistic, with a focus on the composition and the interaction between the people. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the

The image is a photograph capturing a snowy landscape during what appears to be early morning or late afternoon. The sun is partially obscured by a large, bright, symmetrical light source that radiates from the center of the frame, creating a halo effect around it. This light source is surrounded by a bright, golden-yellow glow, which suggests the sun is either rising or setting.

In the foreground, there are several people skiing on a snow-covered slope. They are silhouetted against the bright light, and their forms are slightly blurred, indicating movement. The skiers are wearing winter clothing suitable for cold weather, and their equipment, such as skis and ski poles, is visible.

The background of the image is dominated by a hazy, misty atmosphere, which adds a sense of depth and mystery to the scene. The sky is overcast, and the overall lighting is soft and diffused, enhancing the ethereal quality of the image.

There are no discernible texts or distinctive markings in the image. The style of the photograph is realistic, with a focus on the natural elements of the landscape and the people skiing. The image does not contain any artistic filters or alterations that would suggest it is a digitally manipulated photograph.

To never have a cause beyond the self worth dying for is to never have a life worth living. Lukewarm, tepid, all colour leaves the world with no purpose beyond itself, leaving it all grey. The transcendent shines through to the immanent, no matter through a glass darkly, still she shines, a brave light of a new day. The goal must be divine for only that reflection makes a man more than himself, inspires great artwork, sculptures of beauty, the architecture of the gods come to Earth, and leads the soul on the path, unto that solar glory.

Set hopes and dreams high and defend the righteous, the honorable, the good. Then bring this into the world, of blood and soil, of tribe and warrior band, of home and hearth. Be a demon unto the enemy, merciless, unrelenting, and although yet a man, aspire to the Divinity of gods for sake of our own people. They are far beyond worth any sacrifice we might make, and gladly so, for we are Aryans and in us runs the blood of Kings.

"The merits of every great age are ultimately expressed in its architecture. When peoples internally experience great times, they also lend these times an external manifestation. Their word is then more convincing than the spoken word: it is the word of stone!... Since the construction of our cathedrals, we see here for the first time a truly great architecture on display, an architecture which does not consume itself in the service of petty, day-to-day orders and needs, but is instead an architecture that far surpasses the scope of daily life and its requirements." (Adolf Hitler, 'Speech at the industrial Art Exhibition in the Haus der Deutschen Kunst')

"Khufu's pyramid is perhaps the most colossal single building ever erected on the planet. Its sides rise at an angle of 51°52' and are accurately oriented to the four cardinal points of the compass. The Great Pyramid's core is made of yellowish limestone blocks, the outer casing (now almost completely gone) and the inner passages are of finer light colored limestone, and the interior burial chamber is built of huge blocks of granite. Approximately 2.3 million blocks of stone were cut, transported, and assembled to create the 5.75-million-ton structure, which is a masterpiece of technical skill and engineering ability. The internal walls as well as those few outer casing stones that still remain in place show finer joints than any other masonry constructed in ancient Egypt." The emblem features a central design composed of four concentric circles, each with a different symbol or text inscribed within it. The outermost circle contains a symbol that resembles a stylized letter "M" with a crossbar, while the inner circles contain various inscriptions that are not clearly legible due to the resolution of the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of ancient or medieval art, with a focus on symmetry and the use of geometric shapes. The oldest shapes are the purest, this is where to look for answers, not those which crumbled, unsound through long attrition. In line with the traditionalist view of the aeons we will build on bones of giants, fleshed out by the more modern and fused with primal barbarian rage, only this will support the mighty frame of the Übermensch.

"Human history, far from being a steady ascension towards the better, is an increasingly hopeless process of bastardisation, emasculation and demoralisation of mankind; an inexorable "fall." It rouses in us the yearning to see the end - the final crash that will push into oblivion both those worthless "isms" that are the product of the decay of thought and of character, and the no less worthless religions of equality which have slowly prepared the ground for them; the coming of Kalki, the divine Destroyer of evil; the dawn of a new Cycle opening, as all time-cycles ever did, with "Golden Age'."

The image is a black and white illustration featuring two figures engaged in a dynamic interaction. On the left, there is a figure with a long beard, wearing a long robe and a headdress, which suggests a historical or mythological context. This figure is holding a staff in one hand and appears to be in a stance of command or guidance.

On the right, there is a figure that resembles a lion or a similar large, winged creature. This figure is wearing a large, ornate helmet with a crest and a long, flowing mane. The creature's posture suggests it is in a stance of power or dominance.

The background of the image is plain and white, which contrasts with the detailed figures and allows the viewer to focus on the interaction between the two figures. There are no texts or additional elements in the image. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of ancient or classical art, with a focus on the interaction between the two figures.

The image is a vintage illustration featuring a man in a red toga, holding a scepter, and a dog with a red collar. The man appears to be a figure of authority, possibly a god or a mythological figure, given the context of the illustration. The dog is depicted with a long, flowing mane and is wearing a red collar with a golden buckle. The dog is also holding a red leash. Above the man, there is a depiction of a crescent moon and a star, suggesting a celestial theme.

The illustration is set against a background that includes a constellation map with stars and constellations, indicating a connection to astronomy. The text at the bottom of the image reads "BOOTES CAES VENATII COMA BERNICKS AND 110," which could be a reference to a constellation or a name related to the illustration.

The style of the illustration is reminiscent of 18th-century engravings, with a focus on detailed linework and a classical aesthetic. The colors used are warm and earthy, with the red of the man's toga and the dog's collar standing out against the lighter background. The overall composition and the use of symbols and text suggest a narrative or mythological context, possibly related to the constellation of Bootes.

Scythian legends from deep in prehistory.

>Evidence suggests that the tales of Arthur, Lancelot and other Knights were brought into Europe by various groups of invading Sarmatians and Alans. People sensed that the stories somehow belonged together, so they combined them. Variations reflect each invading group's history and traditions.

>We do know that certain Celtic tribes had penetrated the Danube area as early as the fifth century B.c.E., and another far-flung Celtic tribe, the Cotini, seems to have had some contact with the Germanic Quadi and possibly with the Sarmatians in the same general region at the end of the first century c.E.

>The Lancelot and Grail material seem to be derived from the same source as the sagas of the Narts, and the agent of transmission was most likely the Alans of Gaul.

>These water deities are strongly related to the story of serpent worship, and united with the tale of the sword or weaponry, it introduces the duality of peace and war so well known in the serpent myths. The sword pierces and strikes and involves contemporaneously, the image of the serpent upon the blade via the unique metallurgy employed. This wonderful metallurgy of the Middle Ages and beyond reveals to us in actual artefacts that the serpent itself was fashioned into the blade as part of the process. This of course relates to the fact that Arthur's sword was said to be a fiery serpent in the Dream of Rhonabwy. When Arthur's sword is drawn it was said that two flames of fire burst out of the jaws of the two serpents, and so wonderful was the sword that it was hard for anyone to gaze at it. It is necessary for Arthur to maintain ownership of the sword, whether it is the sword from the stone or Excalibur, as it ensures his victory and his life. The infamous Arthurian writer, Malory, indicates the brightness of the sword and its fiery aspect, writing: "but it was so bright in his enemies eyes, that it gave light like thirty torches. " But the sword in the stone does not last long and the Lady of the Lake gives Arthur his Excalibur, and also a serpent scabbard, which ensures eternal life. Malory states quite clearly "for whiles ye have the scabbard upon you, ye shall never lose no blood, be ye never so sore wounded; therefore keep well the scabbard always with you. "

>The original term, Claidheamh Soluis (Scottish Gaelic) is translated to "Sword of Light," or "Shining Sword," or a "White Glaive of Light," that originates from Scottish-Gaelic folktales. It originally belonged to Manannán mac Lir, king of the Manx people and ally to the Tuatha Dé Danaan, who gifted it to Nuada. The sword is regarded as a god-slaying weapon from Irish mythology. It belonged to Nuada Airgetlám, the first king of the Tuatha Dé Danann, whom named it Claímh Solais (phonetisized Klau-Solas), the sword of light. It was described as a fiery sword of glowing light, engraven with spells, and reputedly undefeatable once unsheathed. It came from the mystical island of Findias, whose location was unknown but described generically as “in the north.” It is a weapon that can either dissolve or deflect weaves of the one power depending on the need of its wielder. The only exception being that of balefire or its derivatives (such as the Flame of Tar Valon), a greenish twist of which was used by Balor, and the sword could not deflect it, killing Nuada. While the sword is most famously associated with King Nuada, it was originally Manannán’s before it became one of the four great treasures of the Tuatha Dé. In the 7th Age, the lost sword was recovered by Saint Patrick, who gifted it to the Naga for protection until it was transferred to Jaxen Marveet while dueling Aiden Finnegan.

>Ophiussa, also spelled Ophiusa, is the ancient name given by the ancient Greeks to what is now Portuguese territory near the mouth of the river Tagus. It means Land of Serpents.

>The Ophi people lived mainly in the inland mountains of Northern Portugal (and Galicia). Others say they lived mainly by the estuaries of the rivers Douro and Tagus. The Ophi worshiped serpents, hence Land of Serpents. There have surfaced a few archeological findings that could be related to this people or culture. Some believe that the dragon sometimes represented as a griffin, from the original Winged Serpent, or Wyvern (the traditional Portuguese Serpe Real), old crest of the crown of the Kings of Portugal and later of the Emperors of Brazil, is linked to local people or to the Celts who had previously invaded the area and could also have been the influence for the Ophi cult.

>A legend relates that on the summer solstice a maiden-serpent, a chthonic goddess, reveals hidden treasures to people journeying through forests. This maiden would live in the city of Porto. Festivities related to this goddess occurred during the solstice. During the rest of the year, she would change into a snake living under or among rocks, and shepherds would set aside some milk from their flocks as an offering to her.

The image is a circular diagram with a blue background and white borders. At the center of the diagram, there is a depiction of the solar system, with the Sun at the top, the Earth at the bottom, and the planets and moons surrounding it. The Sun is represented by a yellow circle with a white cross, and the Earth is shown with a white circle with a yellow cross.

At the top of the diagram, there are five planets listed in order from left to right: the five planets, the moon, and the sun. The planets are colored in green, red, and blue, respectively.

Below the solar system, there is a text that reads "Pythagoreans' Heart of the Universe" in a bold, red font. The text is centered and is the only text on the diagram.

At the bottom of the diagram, there is a label that reads "Outer Sphere of Fixed Stars" in a smaller, black font. This label is also centered and is the only text on the bottom part of the diagram.

The diagram is designed to represent the solar system and its planets, with the text providing context to the diagram. The colors and labels are used to distinguish between the planets and the sun, and the text provides a title for the diagram.

More on the second (original) Earth congruent with geocentrism, and a wave-particle duality. Seems it was common knowledge in the past and still persists in collective myth, possibly even experiential in some way (haven't tracked the UFO claims yet).

>In modern times a hypothetical planet always on the other side of the Sun from Earth has been called a "Counter-Earth", and has been a recurring theme in UFO claims, as well as in fiction (particularly science fiction).

>Along with the Central Fire, the "mysterious" Counter-Earth (Antichthon) was the other heavenly body not visible from Earth. Aristotle described it as "another Earth", from which Greek scholar George Burch infers that it must be similar in size, shape and constitution to Earth. Some (such as astronomer John Louis Emil Dreyer) have thought that Philolaus had it following an orbit such that it was always located between Earth and the Central Fire. However, Burch argues that Philolaus must have thought that it orbited on the other side of the Fire from Earth. Since "counter" means "opposite", and opposite could only be in respect to the Central Fire, it follows that the Counter-Earth must be orbiting 180 degrees from Earth

The image presents a conceptual diagram illustrating the relationship between the concept of God and the concept of the universe. On the left side of the diagram, there is a large blue circle with the text "GOD" written in black, and a smaller blue circle with the text "UNIVERSE" written in black. This suggests that the concept of God is the source of the universe.

On the right side of the diagram, there is a larger blue circle with the text "GOD" written in black, and a smaller blue circle with the text "UNIVERSE" written in black. This indicates that the concept of God is the source of the universe.

In the center of the diagram, there is a smaller blue circle with the text "UNIVERSE" written in black, and a larger blue circle with the text "UNIVERSE" written in black. This suggests that the concept of God is the source of the universe.

The diagram is set against a white background, and the text is in black, making the blue circles stand out as the central elements of the diagram. The text is arranged in a way that guides the viewer's eye from the large blue circle on the left to the smaller blue circle on the right, emphasizing the relationship between the concept of God and the concept of the universe.

The image is a meme featuring a humorous and surreal scene. At the center of the image, there is a statue of Jesus Christ, depicted with a serene expression and wearing a robe. The statue is seated on a throne, which is adorned with a golden halo. To the left of the statue, there is a cat with a surprised expression, looking directly at the viewer. The cat's eyes are wide open, and its mouth is slightly open, as if it has just heard or seen something unexpected.

Above the statue, there is a text overlay that reads, "When you realize you're a multidimensional being, experiencing different perspectives of reality at the same time." This text is in a playful font and is in a lighter color compared to the rest of the image, making it stand out.

The background of the image is a dark, ornate room with a high ceiling and arched windows. The walls are made of stone, and there is a faint glow that suggests the room is illuminated from above. The overall style of the image is light-hearted and whimsical, with a touch of humor.

The text mentions that the Habirra people, who played a significant role in the discovery of the letters, have been known alternatively as Habirra or as S4-G4S in Palestine and Syria during the fourteenth century. It also states that the publication of cuneiform and hieroglyphic texts discovered or excavated during the past sixty years has led to the discovery of the Habirra. The text also mentions that the Habirra are now known to have been located in such distant places as Elam, Asia Minor, and Egypt. The sources which refer to the Habirra are mentioned to be the most part during the second millennium B.C., and the last millennium B.C. The image is a photograph capturing a serene scene of a traditional Indian temple complex. The temple, with its golden-yellow facade, stands majestically in the background, surrounded by a lush green landscape. The temple is situated on the bank of a calm body of water, which mirrors the temple's reflection, adding to the tranquility of the scene.

In the foreground, there are several traditional Indian houses with red roofs, white walls, and wooden balconies. These houses are situated on the opposite bank of the water, creating a symmetrical balance in the composition. The sky above is overcast, casting a soft, diffused light over the scene.

The image is taken from a distance, allowing for a comprehensive view of the temple complex and its surroundings. There are no visible texts or discernible actions in the image. The relative positions of the objects suggest a well-planned layout, with the temple as the central focus, the houses providing a backdrop, and the water serving as a natural divider. In the heart of Kerala, India, there stands a temple unlike any other in the world—rich not just in gold and jewels, but in legends, unanswered questions, and ancient secrets. The sealed door of the Padmanabhaswamy Temple remains one of India's most enduring mysteries, a gateway that has resisted time, technology, and even human will.

No one has opened it. No one knows for certain what lies behind it. But many believe the truth is more astonishing than anything we could imagine.

A door with no locks—and no key

Among the temple's eight known vaults, most have been opened over time. But one—known only as Chamber B—remains completely sealed. Unlike the other vaults, it has no hinges, no bolts, and no visible way to open it. It's guarded by carved images of two massive cobras, and cloaked in legend that warns of dire consequences should anyone attempt to force it open.

According to local tradition, the door was sealed in ancient times by powerful sound vibrations, using a chant that has since been lost to history. It's said that only a high-level sadhu—a spiritual ascetic—who knows the sacred Garuda Mantra can open the door. And today, no one is believed to possess the knowledge or authority to do so.

It is essentially a tantrika (occult) form of worship or tantrika process, supposedly of the Atharva Veda origin. The procedure is not to be found in any written form. It is highly secretive and known only to a few Siddha Yogis (great saints) who live or once lived in Siddhashram, a secret and mystical land deep in the Himalayas.

>According to many, the Naga Bandhana are mechanisms of locks that work with the voice waves of a particular person, when it says a specific spell, which produces small vibrations that trigger these mechanisms and the door opens. It is said that if another person tries to open the door with a different spell or a different voice then the sound waves will change direction waking up the evil and causing the attack of snakes that may be nearby, or it may be ended up with terrible misfortune.

"A divine child will born"

>By this belief, the saints say that a child with such divine knowledge will be born in India who will be able to execute these sacred chants of the Mantra and thus the secret vault will be uncovered without human effort giving all the secrets and mysterious treasures that it withholds for ages.

>"We are told that the seventh day was set aside for rest because this marked the end of their toils...Others say that this is a mark of respect to Saturn, either because they owe the basic principles of their religion to the Idaei, who, we are told, were expelled in the company of Saturn and became the founders of the Jewish race, or because, among the seven stars that rule mankind, the one that describes the highest orbit and exerts the greatest influence is Saturn. A further argument is that most of the heavenly bodies complete their path and revolutions in multiples of seven."

>Thename Idaei is derived from the name of Mount Ida, the highest mountain in Crete, around which the Idaei dwelt. This was a mountain sacred to the Titaness Rhea or Magna Mater, the sister and wife of Cronus or Saturn. Tacitus likewise relates the speculation that the name Judaei, from which Jew is derived, is "the barbarous lengthening of Idaei." Indeed, with thedaktuloi Idaioior Idaean dactyls, a mythical race of dwarves born of Rhea, we find a symbol for proto-Jews or Jews that appears with the Egyptian Ptah and the Greek Hephaestus, often indicated their master. This motif will reoccur in Norse myth.

Seb, known as "the father of snakes," and often depicted with the head of a snake, was also the father of the Egyptian Set or Seth.

>Speculatively, and assuming a late development of the Hebrew Bible, which this study does, the Jewish attachment to the number seven, may have been influenced by the Hindu-Arabic numeral system currently used in the West. Indeed, while today the numeral "7" still bears some similarity to a scythe, this would have been a clearer reference in the original Hindu glyph which was closer to an upside down "J."

The image is a black and white photograph featuring a detailed carving of a serpent or snake. The carving is intricately designed with a symmetrical pattern that includes intertwined lines and curves. The snake's body is elongated and its head is positioned at the center of the carving, with its body extending outward. The carving appears to be made of stone or a similar material, and it is set within a frame that is not fully visible in the image. The background is not clearly discernible due to the focus on the carving. The style of the image is reminiscent of historical or ancient art, with a focus on the craftsmanship and detail of the carving.

Related to the binding on dimensional portals.

>Nagabanda(derived fromSanskritwhich means theropesnake) is a snake that is used as an attribute in the hands of a giant statue of double weapons.This statue serves as the guardian of the temple orHindutemple.[1]In addition, based on the etymology of which to be rope snake, Nagabanda is also interpreted as asymbolof binder or restraint.This understanding makes Nagabanda as a symbol for people who have close ties to the community and have intimate ties with worldly materials.

The image is a close-up photograph of a person's hands and arms. The person is wearing a traditional Indian sari, which is a bright yellow garment with a green border. The sari is draped over the person's shoulders and arms, and the person's hands are folded in front of them, forming a "V" shape. The person is also wearing a gold-colored bangle on their left wrist. The background is a plain, neutral color, which does not distract from the subject of the image. There are no visible texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is a standard, candid photograph, likely taken for a personal or cultural context.

>were called "free men"

Free-men sound a lot like freemasons, can track the Templars to Scotland. Also intermarriage of Anjou, Toulouse, and Scottish royal lines. Possible flight by jews from both England (when banished) and Spain into Scotland too, but this is hazy and I'm not sure.

"Thefollowingquotations,whichspan

seventcenturies,point to an ancient and enduringtraditionthatidentified operative stonemasons and Scottish Freemasons as Jews. Moreover, their "craft" was a mixture of technology and magic, as developed in the esoteric teachings of the architects and builders of the Temple in Jerusalem and preserved by the Kings of Scotland. The appearance of such claims in seventeenth and eighteenth century political and Masonic literature has long puzzled scholars, whom must explore murky oral traditions and anachronistic documents in their search for historical context and credibility. However, two overlooked keys to this mystery lie in the history of Jewish architectural technology and the medieval foundation-myths of Scottish nationalism. By examining the historical context of these quotes, we can begin to understand the international emergence of "higher degrees" of Cabalistic mysticism in the Écossais Masonic lodges that wielded such a mysterious and powerful influence on the culture of the "enlightened" eighteenth and "progressive" nineteenth-centuries."

The image displays a text in a language that appears to be a mix of English and possibly another language, possibly Hebrew, given the presence of the Hebrew script. The text is in a serif font, which is commonly used for formal or academic documents. The text is divided into two columns, with the left column being in a larger font size than the right column. The content of the text is a quote from a source, which is not fully visible in the image. The quote is centered and is the main focus of the image. The style of the image is informational and academic, likely used for educational or scholarly purposes.

The image is a colorful, abstract graphic with a gradient background transitioning from pink to blue. At the top, there is a title in bold, black text that reads "10 TREE" and "12 TREE," indicating a comparison or comparison of two different types of trees. Below the title, there is a list of text in black, which provides information about the two types of trees.

The first type of tree, labeled "UNNATURAL ORGANIC," is described as having a "life grid" that is "aggravated" by "unnatural" elements. The second type, labeled "ARTIFICIAL LIFE GRID," is described as having a "life grid" that is "aggravated" by "artificial" elements.

The text also mentions that the "Artificial Life Grid" refers to the "Core Structure of the Akashic Record," and that the "Artificial Life Grid" creates "limited supply of energy in the Lightbody." It also states that the "Artificial Life Grid" cannot "circulate or receive any more energy" and that the "Artificial Life Grid" is "not able to self regenerate and ascend."

The text also discusses the "Metatronic being" and its "interruption," leading to "negative energy forms and potential destruction and destruction and progressive consumption of the Starburst return to God Source."

At the bottom of the image, there is a pink and blue gradient background with a circular pattern, and the text "KATHARA GRID" is written in black, which is the name of the second type of tree. The text explains that the "KATHARA GRID" refers to the "Core Structure of the Akashic Record" and that the "KATHARA GRID" creates "limited supply of energy in the Lightbody." It also states that the "KATHARA GRID" cannot "circulate or receive any more energy" and that the "KATHARA GRID" is "not able to self regenerate and ascend."

The overall style of the image is artistic and symbolic, with a focus on the concept of trees and their attributes. The use of color and pattern adds to the visual interest and complexity of the text.

The image is a black and white illustration featuring a detailed portrait of a man. The man has a long, flowing beard and mustache, and his hair is styled in a manner that suggests a historical or traditional style. He is wearing a hat with a decorative pattern and a necklace with a pendant. The man's expression is serious, and he has a stern look on his face.

The background of the illustration is plain and does not contain any additional elements or text. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of old, possibly medieval, art, with its use of black ink and the detailed depiction of the man's features.

At the bottom of the illustration, there is a text in German that reads "Sorgenk□nig zum Bomberg in Leerri. Sorgenk□nig zum Bomberg in Leerri." This text is likely a title or a caption for the illustration, and it is written in a script that is characteristic of the era in which the image was created. The text is in a smaller font size compared to the rest of the illustration, which is a common practice in historical or traditional art to emphasize the title or caption.

The image displays a coat of arms with a shield divided into two vertical halves. The upper half is blue, while the lower half is green. In the upper half, there is a white crescent moon and a white star, which is a prominent feature. The lower half features a yellow horizontal stripe and a series of vertical stripes in green, yellow, and white. The background of the image is black, providing a stark contrast to the vibrant colors of the coat of arms. There are no texts or additional elements present in the image. The style of the image is a simple, clear representation of a coat of arms, typically used to represent heraldry or national identity.

Anyone given more thought to the mission of reacquainting the original Adamantine language "source code"? I consider the material harmony of the spheres a resonant key code capable of unlocking the possibility of discovering and reactivating the deeper esoteric principles, functions, and meanings. Just their existence in the public sphere does this, moves them into the collective.

While further material refinement is possible, adding consonants from old Vedic chakra diagrams where they are written on the petals, don't think it necessary at this time. The esoteric is the way forward. My guess would be that some of us who are highly interested in the topic, knew them before in deep past lives. I've read of one method to recover past lives that seems quite doable, will research further for next thread.

I believe that the Black Sun is the Quintessence, the greatest symbol (or manifestation) of the Essential Divinity that emanates from the Godhead (I believe that creation works in pantheism and that the Universal Mind is the Absolute & Creation) towards creation (for me Creation is everything referring to existence and non-existence such as the physical universe and the astral realm and etc., many people believe that all of these happen in different layers or levels outside the physical universe but I see that everything is in a Box, it is The One in every sense, what you see happening in different dimensions actually happens in the same place, the symbol of Monad demonstrates this, All/Box happens in All/Box and nothing happens outside the All/Box since nothing is outside the Universal Mind that is the Box)

The Black Sun manifests the following in the cosmos

>Magickal/Spiritual Energy: Aether/Ether/Prana/Mana/Ki/Qi/Chi/Orenda/Od/Vril/Tantric

>Sekhem

>Life force: Elan Vital/Ase/Silap Inua/Manitou/Reiki

>Gnosis: Human consciousness/Souls

>Kundalini

>Glamour

>Auras/Synesthesia

>Orgone

>Morphogenic Fields/Quantum Fields

>Electromagnetism

A fictional example of the Box/All is Yog-Sothoth from Cthulhu Mythos, since this 'being' is the cosmology itself because Yog-Sothoth is omnipresent in every sense of the word

>Later, I will prepare a "letter" for all interested parties. I intend to turn this general discussion into a legitimate spiritual movement. I have ideas that we can discuss: the theoretical body, the practical body.

>To know about the nature of the world, metapolitics, to know the phenomic metamotives, to identify Asha against the Druj, is to know how to rectify what was twisted by the Satanic Hermeticists. It is to recreate the Solar Aryo-Atlantean knowledge, of the pre-existing current, of the sun behind the sun.

>We need to define what the investigation into the chthonic currents of all religions deformed after the flood will be, to reintegrate what is solar and remake a purer myth, to apply perennialist thought, but rectified against the Donkey God. And the practices will arise precisely from this rectification: with the altered states of druids and shamans, with the symbolic interpretations of dreams and intermediate states, with the control of dream lucidity, with the knowledge of the "bardos" and realms, about samsara and how to achieve victory over the world...

>It is the ultimate reintegration of all knowledge, not communion with zodiacal spirits, but the very initiatory coronation of the elect, the Magi-Kings, the Faustian heroes against the supreme guardian of the threshold, YHWH-SURTR or SETH-SURTR or simply the DONKEY GOD.

Jesus Christ literally is a solar myth. It's probably why Europeans took so well to him.

I tried to attach a picture but the image limit is reached, but anyway, in many classic depictions of Christ we see Christ held aloft by angels, with the solar disk behind his head. He is the Sun/Son at the center. He is surrounded by four lesser lights, which are the "four evangelists" but these are the four cardinal points of the Zodiac wheel: Taurus the Bull across from the Eagle (an ancient form of Scorpio), and Leo the Lion across from Aquarius the Water Bearer.

The esoteric form of European Christianity is literally a solar tradition built "on top of" ancient traditions of Mithraism, Sol Invictus, and Apollo worship, but updated for the Piscean Age.

The Grand Solar Religion is updated every zodiac age (2,160 years). It isn't a whitewash of the old traditions, it is the same tradition specifically for this Zodiac Age, which will transition to Aquarius within the next 150 or so years, depending on how you measure the beginning and end of the 30 degrees of each constellation's house. Mithraism was for the Age of Aries, because Mithras comes in and slays the Bull (Taurus) who was the symbol of the previous age. Each one of these myths has the Solar Hero come in and slay or show power over the symbols of the previous age. I could explain this but the thread is almost gone now and neo-pagans probably don't care about real traditions anyway.

If you think humans will save you, then you're not paying attention.

If you're intelligent and are aware of the eternal fallibility of the human condition, then you're ultimately left with three options:

1. Devote your life to saving and redeeming humanity, only to have all your work undone after you die, assuming you accomplish anything at all. You will beat your head relentlessly against an unbreakable wall until eventually the sweet relief of death takes you.

2. Use your intelligence to prey on others. Become a leader of a movement, manipulate politics, and use it to elevate yourself and your friends at the expense of the hyllic masses, who you ultimately despise. You might get killed in the process, or if successful you'll eventually grow old and terrified of death until you inevitably fall apart and die.

3. Separate from humanity and pursue non-social goals. Become a hermit, a spiritual mystic or some autistic scientist devoted to exploring fringe, esoteric or highly specialized fields of study and minimize your involvement in conventional life. You'll feel peace in life, and ultimately move from life towards whatever happens next. The masses will never appreciate you and will remain enslaved by their stupidity and base appetites.

Fixed it for you. Would you prefer a donkey or a dog?

>Donkeys will often target calves and harass them and keep them away from the cows (which the donkeys may be trying to protect from the "intruding" calves). This can lead to the calves inability to nurse. In many cases, the donkeys escalate to aggressive behavior and end up hurting or even killing calves. Donkeys will do the same with goats or sheep but it's not limited to the kids or lambs. We get rescue calls all the time asking us to pick up donkeys that "did more damage to the livestock in one season than all the predators combined over all the years".

just because christians worship a half pedophile half donkey doesnt mean we need to reduce ourselves to being grug worshipping the sun because sun make crop grow also saturn is the most aesthetically pleasing planet. the whole the jupiter/saturn myth was used was a result of romans who were infested with jews misinterpreting the greeks trying to judaize the greek myths with their babylonian zigguraut power structure where they dictated state policy based on their interpretation of the movement of the stars. jews didnt literally worship saturn, it was just something they tried to use as a tool by associating it with kronos, and zeus with jupiter, which would serve as a bait and switch for yahweh. this crypto-yahwehism was developed over centuries, culminating in the elagabalus god becoming incorporated into the roman pantheon as its supreme deity, sol invictus.

basically roman religion is a meme. its a shitfest of trying to incorporate everyone elses ideas, but not everyone elses ideas are valid and are just fake and gay.

saturn worship doesnt make sense for several reasons

a) jupiter is closer to both the earth and the sun than saturn, saturn comes after. so if you were trying to use the stars as a sort of hierarchy for gods, as the child of kronos zeus would be saturn if you were going by order of distance. to simply use size as a metric for determining supremacy is retarded in both an educational sense for religion, and in its applicability in regards to the myths theyre trying to associate with, which is partly why the roman religion was so vulnerable.

b) it makes no sense in the pantheistic sense either. jupiter bears zero resemblance to saturn. if theyre supposed to represent zeus and kronos, depicted by the greeks as father and son, theyd resemble one another but be distinct. zeus is, in reality, supposed to be the subsequent version of its predecessor creator 'kronos', only a more perfected version. but jupiter isnt that, saturn kind of is though.

[325 / 152]The image is a photograph capturing a bird in flight against a backdrop of a golden sky with scattered clouds. The bird, which appears to be a raptor, is silhouetted against the sun, which is positioned high in the sky. The sun casts a warm glow on the bird's wings and tail, highlighting the bird's form and the texture of its feathers. The bird's wings are spread wide, and its tail is slightly curved, suggesting movement. The image is taken from a low angle, looking up at the bird, which gives a sense of the bird's impressive size and the vastness of the sky. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the image is realistic with a focus on the natural beauty of the bird and the sky.

The "don't go into the light" meme is much older than most people imagine.

"The 4th century BCE gold plate from Petelia gives the following instructions: "Thou shalt find to the left of the House of Háidēs a spring, And by the side thereof standing a white cypress. To this spring approach not near. But thou shalt find another, from the Lake of Memory Cold water flowing forth, and there are guardians before it. Say, 'I am a child of Earth and starry Heaven; But my race is of Heaven (alone). This ye know yourselves. But I am parched with thirst and I perish. Give me quickly The cold water flowing forth from the Lake of Memory.' And of themselves they will give thee to drink of the holy spring. And thereafter among the other heroes thou shalt have lordship." This tells of the route and words to say. The Spirit travels on the path on the right over the Plain of Lethe ("forgetfulness"), and at the end is parched with thirst. Proving it is pure, it may drink from the Lake of Memory, escaping the cycle of birth as a divinity. The Spirit is then "adopted" into the family of gods by Persephónē-Kórē, bestower of immortality."

We'll start with onalatroly again because, well, wtf.

>Onolatryis the worship of the donkey during antiquity. In Imperial Rome, the charge of onolatry was used as a polemic against Jews and Jewish Christians. The association of Jews with donkeys was a common feature of Hellenic as well as Latin ethnographic and historical writings, and included accusations of worshipping a golden donkey head and even sacrificing foreigners to it at intervals.

"Historian. He wrote Tactics in 2 books, [and]On the Jews; in which [latter] he says that they bowed down to the golden head of an ass and every seven years hunted a stranger and attacked him and tore his flesh into thin strips and thus killed him."
(Damocritus, Suda, Delta #49)

It's recorded by the Romans that they ate the guy too, jews have a taste for Greeks apparently and Aryans in general, especially children.

>The notion of the evil (Judean) creator had existed for centuries in native Egyptian revisionary mythology. The notion was thus already prepared for its early Christian application to the Judeo-catholic creator. Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans identified the evil god Seth-Typhon (often depicted as a donkey-like creature) with the Jewish god Yahweh. The Seth-Yahweh tradition, with all its negative valence, was then applied to the creator worshiped by Christians as well. Evidence for this view comes from the early Christian depiction of the creator and his sons in donkey (Typhonian) form. In addition to material culture (gems, amulets, and graffiti), four texts are analyzed in this chapter: The Birth of Mary, the Secret Book of John, the so-called Ophite diagram, and the Phibionites described by Epiphanius.

>The Greeks identified him with Typhon, the lord of chaos and a monster, resulting in the hybrid form "Seth-Typhon". Seth was also identified with the Phoenician storm god, Baal. Through the cultural practice of interpretatio Graeca (identification of foreign gods), the malignant character of Seth and his donkey appearance were transferred to the god of the Jews, Yahweh (YHVH). This fusion (Seth-Yahweh) was reinforced, in part, by the sound: the Greek word for Yahweh (Iaō) sounded, with a "perverse twist of the tongue," like the native Egyptian word for donkey (eiō or iō). This led to the widely known tradition that the Jews secretly worshipped Yahweh as a donkey or the golden head of an ass (onolatry) in the Temple of Jerusalem. Early Christian groups who believed in an evil creator (such as the Phibionites, Ophites, and Sethians) adapted this "Seth-Yahweh cultural memory" to identify the Jewish creator as a hostile, demonic ruler. This tradition manifested in their cosmology, such as the description of a being with the "face or form of a donkey (onou morphēn)" seen in the Holy of Holies in the apocryphal The Birth of Mary. Furthermore, the seventh ruling demon in the Ophite diagram (drawn by Christian theologians in the 2nd century A.D.) manifests a "donkey face (onou . . . prosopon)" and is called Onoel ("Donkey-God"). Due to the majority Christians' adoption of the Jewish Creator as the supreme deity, the accusation of donkey worship was easily transferred to Christians. This polemic culminated in a mocking representation displayed on a plaque around the late 2nd century A.D. in Carthage (or Rome) of a being with donkey ears and a hoof labeled: "ONOCOETES, GOD OF THE CHRISTIANS"

>But I should think that if the Jews had such an antipathy against a hog, they would kill it as the magicians do mice; when, on the contrary, they are by their religion as much prohibited to kill as to eat it. And perhaps there may be some reason given for this; for as the ass is worshipped by them as the first discoverer of fountains. (Plutarch, Quæstiones Convivales 4.5.2)

Then we have the quite damning account of Manetho, an Egyptian scribe (early 3rd century BC), which describes two stages of what would become the biblical confabulation Exodus as a hostile takeover of Egypt by Hyksos jews who then committed all sorts of atrocities, as jews generally do, then were driven out to Jerusalem. Followed by another wave consisting of various lepers and miscreants sent to Avaris, the old Hysos capital and Set's HQ, then starting a rebellion in league with Hyksos from Jerulaselm. This being led by a leper Moses, pretty much a zombie, previously a priest of Osiris at Heliopolis, turned to the dark side of Set/yhwh and devilry. Again they were driven out.

<https://www.jasoncolavito.com/manetho.html>

"The Hyksos King Apophis is recorded as worshipping Set exclusively, as described in the following passage: [He] chose for his Lord the god Seth. He did not worship any other deity in the whole land except Seth."

>The close relation between the God of the Semitic Hyksos and Typhon-Seth is an established fact, and it appears now that not only the names of Baal, but also of Sabbaoth and even of Yahveh were frequently identified with this powerful war god of Lower Egypt. In the first centuries of the Christian era Christian influence made itself felt, and Typhon-Seth was confounded with Seth the son of Adam, who was revered as a prototype and prior incarnation of Jesus Christ.

The oldest myths we still retain put the kike at Mt. Sarsar ie. Mt. Seir in Jordan around the area of Petra (then called Edom) where they were known as Suteans, Shasu, and Hibiru. They took over the temple belonging to the Horites here, prior to this they were murderous nomadic bandits in the Sinai.

>Mount Seir (Hebrew: הַר-שֵׁעִיר, romanized: Har Sē'ir) is the ancient and biblical name for a mountainous region stretching between the Dead Sea and the Gulf of Aqaba in the northwestern region of Edom and southeast of the Kingdom of Judah. It may also have marked the older historical limit of Ancient Egypt in Canaan. A place called "Seir, in the land of Shasu" (𐎓-ššw s'r – ta-Shasu se'er), thought to be near Petra, Jordan, is listed in the temple of Amenhotep III at Soleb (ca. 1380 BC)

Jews literally came from Mt. Doom in Edom.

<http://www.acacialand.com/edom.html>

"The earliest Israelites, semi-nomadic highlanders in central Canaan mentioned on the Merneptah Stele at the end of the 13th century BCE, are to be identified as a Shasu enclave. Since later Biblical tradition portrays Yahweh "coming forth from Seir", the Shasu, originally from Moab and northern Edom/Se'ir, went on to form one major element in the amalgam that would constitute the "Israel" which later established the Kingdom of Israel. Per his own analysis of the El-Amarna letters, Anson Rainey concluded that the description of the Shasu best fits that of the early Israelites."

Although details fade in the mists, it seems likely these evil creatures (picrel) called for sacrifice to their Saturnian black rock demon beyond the depths of antiquity, unto the very dawn of time. They are indeed our ancient enemy, coming forth at night to feast on human flesh, driven back by our bright warriors to the edge of extinction, only to slink back in and recover, like Sauron to Mordor, until that burning eye of inequity covered the lands.

The image is a black and white illustration that depicts two figures engaged in a combat scenario. The figure on the left is facing the figure on the right, who is facing away from the viewer. Both figures are wearing armor and are in a fighting stance, with their arms raised and their bodies poised for action. The figure on the left has a sword in hand, while the figure on the right has a spear. The background features a classical architectural setting with columns and a painting of a battle scene. The style of the illustration is reminiscent of historical or classical art, with a focus on the dramatic action and the dramatic lighting. There is a signature at the bottom of the image that reads "C.C.".

Most wouldn't think of violence in association with sacred geometry, most. The pattern discussed in /dgg/ #1, the Lo Shu magic square of 9, Seal of Saturn, was used as basis for a highly effective sword technique in Spain as well as footwork for Tai Chi in China. In many ways it was the peak of sword art.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Luoshu\_Square

Magic square 9 also encodes all divine proportion, extrapolated, it forms the torus of Marko Rodin's vortex mathematics and encodes the numbers 3, 6, 9 so lauded by Tesla.

>If you only knew the magnificence of the 3, 6, and 9, then you would have the key to the universe. (Nicola Tesla) plan used in the training practices of a rapier fencing style called la destreza ("the skill"). This was, in its time, the most formidable sword form of Western martial arts. Known often as "the Spanish circle," it dominated throughout the centuries of rapier dueling from the late 1500s onward. The technique itself originated with Jerónimo de Carranza in 1569. Figures 7.1 as well as 7.8–7.10) are all from L'Académie de L'Épée written about la destreza in the early 1600s by Gerard Thibault. It is said to have been the only esoteric martial art ever developed in the West.

In western traditions it is known as the starcut diagram, and appears in many places, some perhaps unexpected as we shall see.

The image is a black and white illustration featuring a symmetrical pattern with a central figure that appears to be a humanoid figure, possibly a deity or a mythological figure, standing upright with a raised hand. Surrounding this figure are various figures and symbols, including animals, human figures, and geometric shapes, all arranged in a grid-like pattern. The central figure is surrounded by a series of concentric circles, each containing a different figure or symbol, creating a sense of depth and complexity. At the bottom of the image, there is a caption that reads "Figure 7.1 The Starcut and the sword art." The text is in a serif font, and the style of the image is reminiscent of historical or classical art, possibly from a religious or mythological context. The overall composition and the use of symbols suggest a theme of spiritual or mythological significance.

The image is a black and white illustration that depicts a scene within a grand, classical-style building. The architecture features a series of arches and columns, with a central dome above. The floor is paved with a geometric pattern, and there are statues and sculptures adorning the walls.

In the center of the image, a group of people is gathered, seemingly in a state of celebration or ceremony. They are dressed in historical clothing, suggesting a time period that is not modern. The individuals are holding objects that appear to be weapons, such as swords and shields, which are also part of the attire.

The people are arranged in a semi-circular formation, with some facing the camera and others turned away, creating a sense of depth and perspective. The overall composition of the image suggests a narrative, possibly depicting a historical event or ceremony.

The absence of color and the detailed depiction of the clothing and weapons contribute to the historical and realistic feel of the artwork.

The image is a page from a book or a publication, likely a technical or academic one, as indicated by the text and the layout. The page is divided into two sections, each containing a different type of diagram.

On the left side, there is a diagram that appears to be a grid or a grid-like structure with lines and dots. The grid is filled with a pattern that resembles a series of interconnected squares or polygons. The grid is divided into two columns, with the top column containing a series of smaller squares or polygons, and the bottom column containing larger squares or polygons. The lines connecting the squares or polygons are straight and evenly spaced, creating a pattern that is consistent throughout the grid.

The overall style of the image is academic and technical, with a focus on geometric patterns and symmetry. The use of lines and dots to create the grid and star-like structure is a common technique in mathematics and geometry to represent complex shapes and patterns.

>The array that he copied became the primary magic square at the deepest numerical core of Chinese philosophy. It determined one of the classical layouts of the Pa Kua—the eight trigrams of the Chinese oracle of changes, the I Ching. It was incorporated into the shaman's dance known as the "star walk"—or the Yu Bu. The underlying schema of all these are, in essence, identical to the Starcut,

>The Yu Bu was performed "shamanically" by a practitioner seen as representing, and invoking publicly, the powers of the universal Tao. The dance took in all the trigrams of the I Ching. It also stepped out a count of the "Nine Stars in the Heavens." Some of the visualizations indicated to be done by the practitioner, are extraordinarily vivid, and the powers invoked are accorded the status of military generals. So the dance had a martial, self-defended character infusing its stance toward the four directions. It comes as no surprise that more recently the numerical sequence has been equated with the transfer of a practitioner's weight in the movements of the "supreme ultimate" martial art of tai chi chuan.

The "Big Dipper", aka Ursa Major, the Great Bear, the Swastika. Yet another link between Saturn and the swastika, both western and eastern traditions are methods of drawing in their power.

>Yubu, translated as Pace(s) of Yu or Step(s) of Yu, is the basic mystic dance step of religious Daoism. This ancient walking or dancing technique typically involves dragging one foot after another, and is explained in reference to the legendary Yu the Great, who became lame on one side of his body from exerting himself while establishing order in the world after the Great Flood. Daoist religions, especially during the Six Dynasties period (220–589), incorporated Yubu into rituals, such as the Bugang 步罡 "pace the Big Dipper", in which a Taoist priest would symbolically walk the nine stars of the Beidou 北斗 "Big Dipper" in order to acquire that constellation's supernatural energy.

In the heavens hang images that reveal good fortune and misfortune; the holy sage reproduces these. The Yellow River brought forth a map and the Lo River brought forth a writing; the holy men took these as models.

They were employed by bothDaoistsandConfuciansand served to explain the correlation of the hexagrams of theYijing"Book of Changes" with the universe and human life. They are also used in geomancy (fengshui)."

"TheHan period (206 BCE-220 CE) scholarKong Anguo, author of a commentary on theShangshu, was the first who who mentioned the legend of a dragon horse (longma) that emerged out of the Yellow River. Its back was said to be patterned with the shape of the eight trigrams. The diagram on the back of the horse was the so-called "River Chart" that was fixed by the mythological emperorFu Xiand was preserved in the shape of the eight trigrams."

"As an auspicious omen, the horse is reported to have regularly appeared during the reigns of the virtuous rulersYao,Shun, andYu.Confuciuslamented that during his lifetime, the miraculous horse (often translated as "unicorn") did not appear again, which was a bad portent of unlucky times."

"Both inscriptions are mentioned in the Xici commentary of the Yijing. The sage rulers read and interpreted the "River Chart" and the "Luo Inscription" and modelled their reign according to the evidence provided in the two diagrams. Yet the same text also says that Fu Xi invented the arrangement of the trigrams after observing the starry sky and all things on earth, but it does not refer to the "River Chart".

>A dragon horse is the [qi(氣)] vital spirit of Heaven and Earth. As a being its shape consists of a horse's body, yet it has dragon scales. Therefore it is called 'dragon horse'. Its height is eightch'ihfivets'un. A true dragon horse has wings at its sides and walks upon the water without sinking. If a holy man is on the throne it comes out of the midst of the Ming river, carrying a map on its back

>A subsequentBamboo Annalscontext describes the spirit of the Yellow River as a person rather than a dragon-horse, and says Yao rather than Yu received theHetuin order to control theGreat Flood.

>As he was looking at the Ho [Yellow River], a tall man, with a white face and fish's body, came out and said, 'I am the spirit of the Ho.' He then called Yu, and said, 'Wan-ming [Yu] shall regulate the waters.' Having so spoken, he gave Yu a chart of the Ho, containing all about the regulating of the waters; and returned into the deep.

This is the "source code" spoken of in the last thread, to produce order from chaos, still rather elusive, related here to a spiritual state and the dragon horse or Longma. The "chart on the prognostication dish of the Great Unity of the Nine Palaces"has the same distribution of numbers and might be worth deciphering, linked below.

The abstract section is highlighted in a different color, which is purple, and it contains the text "Carr Anton Paul Ruck" followed by a paragraph of text. The text is in English and discusses the natural occurrence of megalithic structures in the region identified as Thrace, which are believed to be the foot of religious observances, and the origin of Dionysian rites. Wine was recognized as the product of fungi growth and was a significant part of the Dionysian rites. The text also mentions the legendary wine of Thrace and its association with the deity in his person that predated viticulture. The document seems to be a scholarly work, possibly a research paper or an academic article, discussing the historical and cultural aspects of Thrace and its connection to wine and religious observances.

The image displays a circular emblem with a predominantly black background. The emblem features a stylized depiction of a dragon, which is the central figure. The dragon is depicted with its wings spread out and its body facing forward. It has a crescent moon above its head and a full moon below its tail. The dragon's body is outlined in white, and its scales are depicted in a darker shade, giving the impression of a metallic or reflective surface. The emblem is bordered by a thin white line, and there is a small, stylized letter "D" located at the bottom of the dragon's body. The overall style of the emblem is reminiscent of medieval or fantasy art, with a focus on the mythical creature and the moon.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a group of cartoon-style characters. In the foreground, there is a large cardboard sign with the text "THE BEGINNING IS NEAR" written in bold, black, sans-serif font. The sign is held up by a character with a purple face and a green body, wearing a black suit and tie. Behind this character, there are three other cartoon-style characters, each with a different expression. The first character on the left has a purple face and is smiling, the second character in the middle has a green face and is frowning, and the third character on the right has a green face and is laughing. The background of the image is a blurred cityscape with a building and a streetlight. The style of the image is humorous and seems to be a digital creation, possibly for a meme or a social media post.

something i forgot to post and it is related to the Electrical Universe, from the good old Spaniard, EvropaSoberana

ABOUT THE IONS

In this section I am going to concentrate, not only on the chemical contamination of the air (gases, smoke, dust, smog, chemical products, etc.), which is well known, but on the ionic contamination of certain environments. We should sit down to think that a human being can survive maybe two months without food and maybe two weeks without water, but without air, his death is a matter of minutes. We never stop breathing or introduce into our body what surrounds us, with which the state of the air influences in an absolutely decisive way in our health —and, as we will see, in the bioelectric balance of even the last cell of our body.

Negative ions (or anions), very small and extremely active molecular pieces, and possessing a negative electrical charge equivalent to that of an electron. The benefits of negative ions are widely described, including neutralization of unpleasant odors, bacteria and pollen (thus of allergies and infections), freshness, great reduction of environmental pollution, general invigoration of the body, etc. Many air filtration devices (as in hospitals) are equipped with negative ion generators, which are also considered a plus for air conditioners. Furthermore, a good amount of negative ions inside and outside of our cells greatly enhances all the body's biological functions.

How is air ionized? Naturally, thanks to shortwave electromagnetic radiation from the Sun and other cosmic rays, which bombard the molecules of the air energizing its fragments. The importance of these cosmic rays is seen in the article Bioelectricity and Astral Magnetism. Another natural ionizer is the evaporation and movement of the large masses of water, as well as the movement of the wind ("friction") over large open spaces. In this way, it is not surprising that the greatest charges of negative ions or atmospheric chi are found in the fresh air of rural areas, the churning coasts, the beaches, the parks and, especially, of the mountainous heights, where the solar radiation and Cosmic is more intense, where the wind blows strong and incessantly, and where there is water in the form of Ibones, lakes, very beaten and oxygenated currents, and frequent precipitation. It is in the moments after a great storm that the concentration of negative ions reaches its highest levels. The mountains bring man closer to nobility and kindness. Our ancestors were not wrong when they attributed mystical qualities to the mountains related to the divinification of the hero, health and closeness to the gods. The summits—where the cosmic rays give stronger, where the ground is closer to the sky, where the air and the water are pure and crystalline, where each bare rock is the result of a bitter resistance against the incessant wind, where everything is tanned, Oxygenated and in continuous renewal—these are the places where there are the highest concentrations of negative ions and Aether, especially after the storms. Not to mention the rising telluric currents, which by "funnel effect" always end up being channeled towards the slopes and accumulating in its peaks, true energy centers of the planet. Those who have had the privilege of spending days or even weeks benefiting from such a source of health know well what I am talking about.

While negative ions have a most desirable health effect, positive ions (or cations, static) are exactly the opposite, since they are formed from dust, smoke and toxic chemicals, in the form of large polymolecular ions, charging positive (same as protons), and that have the effect of annulling negative ions by attracting them, capturing them and neutralizing them. This causes tiredness, discomfort, allergies, weakness, lack of adequate oxygenation, and leads to a multitude of diseases. It is also shown that positive ions increase body production of serotonin (the famous "stress hormone").

To give an idea about the distribution of negative and positive ions, it is worth saying that in the field areas there are usually around three negative ions for each positive ion. In cities, this proportion is reversed in an absolutely disproportionate way, easily reaching figures greater than five hundred positive ions for each negative ion. In case the environmental pollution in the form of dust, chemical substances and pernicious fumes from factories and vehicles were not enough to neutralize and more than counteract the benefits of scarce negative ions, we also have the de-ionizer effect of air conditioning devices. (Those that are not provided with negative ion generators), synthetic fiber clothing, central heating, plastic materials and closed spaces. It is a well-known fact that a working day in an office leaves workers exhausted without having made any physical effort, while a mountaineer, after an intense day of mountaineering, will certainly be fatigued, but in no way "crushed", but invigorated, cheerful, fresh and with morality. HIGH. It is also the reason why, during the first years of the space program, astronauts, despite being well-trained and excellent health, were absolutely destroyed and ended up seriously dizzy after just a few hours inside a capsule, whether orbiting in space as if they were rehearsing on the earth. When the cause of the problem was discovered was due to the metal of the capsules, the devices did not take long to be equipped with negative ion generators that created a beneficial artificial atmosphere inside, allowing astronauts to spend even months in space.

WAYS TO AVOID POSITIVE IONS AND IMPROVE THE EFFECTS OF NEGATIVE IONS

In a site as highly de-ionized as the current polluted world of large cities, some simple guidelines can be followed to reduce the horrible impact that this environment has on our bodies and minimize Aggressions to our precious bioelectrical system, which is the key to individual growth and balance.

1. Frequent rural areas of pure air, especially mountains: exercising in the areas mentioned to oxygenate to the last cell of our body with that beneficial air. Highly recommended mountaineering and camping, as well as skiing or snowing.

2.Avoid "as far as possible" enclosed environments loaded with tobacco, kitchen fumes, and little ventilated, or ventilated by air conditioning devices and central heaters without negative ion generators: on the other hand —and although I know it sounds Paranoid—In closed environments with a lot of staff concentration, the air is full of the effluvium (breath, perspiration and often worse things) of people who are not precisely having healthy habits. In the same way that with the smoke of others we become passive smokers, with the effluvium of others we are also estrogening, contaminating and de-ionizing "passively". It is clear that in modern life it is impossible to avoid large human concentrations (tails, crowds, public transport, gyms) and that it is normal to be part of several in a week – but the ideal is to keep them fair and necessary.

3.Avoid "as far as possible" fluorescent tubes and new CFL bulbs: no matter how much they are a form of low consumption lighting, they also constitute a source of de-ionization, artificial electromagnetic fields and dirty electricity.

4.Avoid "as far as possible" the TV and computer screens: since they are sources of de-ionization and electromagnetic fields of undesirable charge, as we see in the article about electrosmog. Good idea to get ionizers (there are specific to screens) that correct the situation, especially for those who work regularly with PCs. Bad idea of all those people who systematically leave the TV or the PC on even though they are not paying attention to it, since what they get This is to contaminate the electromagnetic field of an entire room. To say nothing of the people who watch several hours of TV a day, who are the majority, or of the kids who spend their childhood playing with a console. According to Taoism, these devices emit waves that reach the eye, ascend the optic nerve and deactivate the pituitary gland, associated with the sixth chakra and the "third eye", the organ of the creative imagination.

5. There are certain winds, such as those that arrive from the Sahara desert, which contain a pernicious charge of positive ions. It is known, for example, the negative psychological effect of the Levante wind (a true avalanche of positive ions) on Cadiz, and this is recognized to such an extent that it constitutes a mitigating circumstance in case of committing a crime. Something similar happens with winds like Tramontana or Sirocco (Spain), Sharav (Israel), Föhn (Germany, Switzerland, Austria), Chinook (Canada), Berg (South Africa), Afganet (Asia central) or Hamsin (Middle East). On the contrary, the cooler and cleaner north winds tend to contain a very beneficial charge of negative ions. It is obvious that the winds cannot be "avoided", but at least it is interesting to be aware of the reason for this phenomenon, which has the ability to alter our mood in a radical way.

6. Avoid "as far as possible" the great cities: since many have the misfortune of living in large cities, at least try to spend long time in parks (that if they are not taken by whores, junkies, travelers and ethnic bands), and organize Getaways to country areas, especially mountainous. Dedicate himself to canyoning, climbing, canoeing, mountaineering, simple walks or whatever, but making sure of energizing the body well, at the very least once a week, with a pure "real" air.

7. Avoid "as far as possible" the interior of cars: because of the bodies and plastic materials (producers of estrogen saturated odors, by the way), they are usually generated inside the cars negative electric fields (repelling negative ions And they attract the positives), with which the people who take the car even to go shit do not stop me. This inertia is the cause of the sleeping inside the car so common, even though nothing is being done to "get tired".

8. Avoid plasticized materials: they have a deionizing effect and also, due to their chemical constitution, they are dismissing pro-estrogenic substances. Avoid plastic furniture or plastic children's toys, and be aware of what a lot of appliances (toasters, mixers, microwaves, refrigerators, etc.) of plastic means.

9. Remove carpets: They act as sponges that hold bubbles of hot and vitiated air, positive ions, bacteria, dust particles, mites, cleaning chemicals and other undesirable agents. They are a cause of weight in many discomforts, especially respiratory and allergy-related. A hard, smooth floor can be swept and scrubbed thoroughly and easily.

Anonymous Tue 02 Dec 2025 15:56:25 No.41598473 Report

10. Buy an ionizer (negative ion generator): Install negative ion generators in the air conditioners that we use, in our car or simply in rooms where we spend a lot of time. The Japanese, who are well familiar with the concept of Ki, have been working in atmospheres ionized by generators for a long time, which to a certain extent can be the cause of their great productivity and performance. As I have said, everyone knows that driving "stunned" and "tired", not only because of the estrogens dismissed by the plastic upholstery material and others, but also by the charge of positive ions that accumulates due to the electromagnetic field of the motor and the materials of the chassis and bodywork. If everyone had an artifact of those mentioned in their car, "road tiredness" would be a thing of the past, that tendency for our passengers to fall asleep automatically on long trips would not appear, and, in addition, road accidents would be reduced by saving quite a few lives, since Reflections and attention would be refined.

11. Even if one lives in a healthy area with a powerful natural electric field, the benefits of environmental ionization can be nullified by wearing rubber shoes, dressing with synthetic fibers, living locked between furniture and plastic objects, or not ventilating the house, because everything This tends to isolate the body from so beneficial atmospheric electricity. To check what I say, just walk barefoot and without a headdress, dressed in light cotton garments, through a field or garden in a rural area that still preserves the morning dew. The wet grass (it will be the cause of the high esteem that almost all European cultures had by the dew or "moonwater", relating it to megalithic monuments) acts as a magnetic pole, literally absorbing the energy of the sky through our body, something which has an incredibly energizing effect. Walking barefoot and on natural soil "whenever possible".

The image is a black and white line drawing that depicts a complex circular pattern with numerous small figures arranged in a spiral formation. The figures are depicted in various poses, suggesting movement or action. The pattern is composed of a series of concentric circles, with each circle containing a smaller circle within it, creating a sense of depth and complexity.

In the upper right corner of the image, there is a series of Chinese characters, which appear to be a translation or description of the pattern. The characters are written in a traditional Chinese script, with the characters "轮转" and "轮转" being the most prominent. The characters translate to "round" and "round" respectively, which could be interpreted as a description of the circular pattern.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of traditional Chinese ink painting, characterized by its simplicity and focus on line and form. The absence of color and the use of black and white give the image a timeless and classic feel. The image does not contain any additional elements or decorations, focusing solely on the pattern and the accompanying text.

These paces of Yu are likely another cargo cult type practice, but an old one which is interesting. It's where daoism and therefore neigong ties back into shamanism, more spontaneous trance states, movements, and otherworldly voyages. Neigong and yoga are great for health and wellbeing but don't generally work as advertised, well except for that one guy. They are signposts, and contain partial truths, which is what we are looking for itt.

Of note is the dimensional "gate" associated with the Bear/swastika which is consistent across many cultures, Aryan or those with our imprint. Alchemy has the same concept, as does Serrano. The Yu steps focus distictly on the shape of the constellation and its connection to the underlying magic square 9. These star patterns are archetypes, keys if you will to unlocking universal forces, both the shapes, the actual light, and the myths/godforms. There is formalized neigong methods involving light from different constellations, probably too rigid for the range of probabilities involved, but again related.

Bifrost, is a burning bridge that reaches between Midgard (Earth) and Asgard, the realm of the gods. Both the Poetic Edda and the Prose Edda also refer to the bridge as Ásbrú (Old Norse "Æsir's bridge").

Green.

>According to the Prose Edda, the bridge ends in heaven at Himinbjörg, the residence of the god Heimdall, who guards it from the jötnar. The bridge's destruction during Ragnarök by the forces of Muspell is foretold. Scholars have proposed that the bridge may have originally represented the Milky Way and have noted parallels between the bridge and another bridge in Norse mythology, Gjallarbrú. It may also represent other phenomena, such as the Aurora Borealis, which fits better with the notions of it being fiery and having three colours, while a rainbow form is very distinct and well-known, being stable and not fiery, with more numerous colours always in the same order. Also, rainbows do not end in the heavens, but appear to arch back and return to the land.

Have I heard this story before?

>In J.R.R. Tolkien's legendarium, the "level bridge" of "The Fall of Númenor", an early version of the Akallabêth, recalls Bifröst. It departs from the earth at a tangent, allowing immortal Elves but not mortal Men to travel the Old Straight Road to the lost earthly paradise of Valinor after the world has been remade (from a flat plane to a sphere)

Again in the region of Ophiuchus and the Tree, x marks the spot, hoist the main. Silver gate is the gate of man incarnating. Golden gate is a door to heaven.

>The ecliptic is the apparent path the Sun takes through the constellations over the course of a year, defined by Earth's orbit around the Sun. The galactic plane is the midplane of the Milky Way Galaxy, as viewed from our position within it. These two great circles on the celestial sphere intersect at exactly two points, termed the "galactic nodes." Astronomers use these nodes to relate galactic coordinates to the more familiar ecliptic-based system.

>Over centuries, various cultures have interpreted these points with symbolic meaning. For example, traditions and esoteric interpretations refer to them as "gates." The intersection near the constellation Sagittarius and Ophiuchus, pointing toward the Galactic Center, is sometimes called the "Golden Gate," while the opposite intersection near Taurus and Orion is often referred to as the "Silver Gate."

>Since the Greek inherited much of their wisdom from the Egyptians, it's more than reasonable to suspect that the gate or portal mentioned in the Book of the Gates through which the pharaoh enters the Netherworld is, in fact, the Gate of God that the Greek writer Macrobius writes about. The Gate of God was also called the Golden Gate, while the Gate of Men was called the Silver Gate. The very same Egyptian cross symbolism used by the pharaohs associated with the Golden and Silver gates of the soul (and the Sun) can still be recognized in the coat of arms of the Vatican, consisting of two crossed keys; one Golden, one Silver.

Also the skull and crossbones if I'm not mistaken.

Might as well write about this, retarded to talk about dimensional gates so much and not mention it, and hey might brighten the narrative with some outlandish contention.

This bits just back story really, but the rest will make less sense without it.

Started hunting the devil in my late teens, noticed there was sometimes demons in my dreams, worked out a way of inducing horrible nightmares, and began slaughtering them. Always hated evil. At first fields full of demons in battle, but as it progressed, down through the winding tunnels and the raging ocean of the abyss, there was less of them but they were more fucked up.

Learned then there was a path here, hanged man to the dancer, the razors edge, death and madness etc. A fools chance. Knew it was mine, but still would have turned back if not for the life of another, required a step into the dark, and the light went out in me like flicking a switch.

So I hunted the fucking things, killed countless monsters and abominations, every night demon dreams, snakes, tunnels, rooms, the maze got deeper for 13yrs. This is the labyrinth. Far past madness and ruin, to the very bitter edge of no return. A horror story. Where the ultimate portal guardian lurks, the donkey god, the demiurge.

Always wanted to kill the thing, which is weird really, I mean who does that? Kek, work in progress. Anyway that sets the scene for the gate saga, which was not long before the terminus or base experience in the astral, and likely had some effect on the outcome.

Who is Enêpsigos?

>I am Enêpsigos, who also have a myriad name ... What seekest, what askest thou? I undergo changes, like the goddess I am called. And I change again and pass into possession of another shape. And be not desirous therefore to know all that concern me. But since thou art before me for this much, hearken. I have my abode in the moon, and for that reason, I possess three forms. At times I am magically invoked by the wise as Kronos. At other times, in connection with those who bring me down, I come down and appear in another shape. The measure of the element is inexplicable and indefinable, and not to be frustrated. I then, changing into these three forms, come down and become such as thou seest me; but I am frustrated by the angel Rathanael, who sits in the third heaven. This then is why I speak to thee. Yonder temple cannot contain me.

The image is a collage of various ancient artifacts and texts, primarily focusing on the origins and characteristics of deities and their representations. The collage includes images of statues, reliefs, and sculptures, each with a distinct style and historical context.

Moving to the top right, there is a depiction of a figure with a crown and a crescent moon, which is reminiscent of the ancient Egyptian god Osiris. The figure is shown in a dynamic pose, suggesting movement and power.

Below these images, there are two texts that provide historical context and information about the deities. The first text, located in the center of the image, states, "The origin of Allah the Triple Goddess is Semitic, making the crescent moon their later symbol." This suggests that the crescent moon is a symbol associated with the goddess of Islam, which is a significant aspect of the image.

The second text, located in the bottom left, reads, "Hulal, and Ishhtar, share a common Semitic origin, making the crescent moon their later symbol." This text also supports the idea that the crescent moon is a symbol associated with the goddess of Islam.

The bottom of the image features a relief of a figure with a crescent moon and a star, which is reminiscent of the ancient Egyptian god Horus. The relief is set against a dark background, emphasizing the intricate details of the figure.

Overall, the image presents a collage of ancient artifacts and texts that explore the origins and characteristics of deities, particularly focusing on the crescent moon and the goddess of Islam. The collage is designed to provide a visual representation of these concepts, with each artifact and text contributing to the overall theme.

>In the most primordial symbolism, the Moon signifies the passive receptivity of manifestation, the luminous reflection of the principal Light. The feminine, thus identified with the lunar, represents the mirror through which the Divine Intellect projects the multiplicity of forms. Hence the figure of the Triple Goddess expressing the ternary rhythm of becoming: generation, fullness, and dissolution.

Among the Arabs, as among the Greeks, this triad appears as Al-Lat, Al-Uzza, and Manat, counterparts of Selene, Artemis, and Hecate three modalities of the same potency.

Capricorn marks the Gate of the Gods, the polar threshold where the soul may ascend from generation to the Principle. Opposite lies Cancer, the Gate of Men, through which beings descend into birth. Between these two portals unfolds the cycle of manifestation, ruled by Saturn, lord of time, and the Moon, mirror of becoming. Saturn, the outermost sphere, is the limit of form the ring of necessity woven by the Moirai, the Greek image of karma. The Moon is the matrix of generation, the mirror through which the spirit's light becomes refracted into multiplicity. Together they define the enclosure of the cosmos, the realm of Chronos and Anánke, where all souls revolve within the wheel of samsara.

>This enclosure is the domain of the Demiurge, or Seth-Yaldabaoth, the "god of this world," who mistakes reflection for reality. The Moon-Saturn polarity is his veil: the cycle of birth and death sustained by time and illusion. Yet the same Saturn who binds also guards the Gate of release. When the intellect awakens and turns its gaze from reflection to source, the lunar illusion becomes transparency, and the saturnian ring opens into eternity. Thus the world, once prison, becomes passage; the Moon regains her light, and Chronos is transfigured into the timeless Logos.

The image is a photograph capturing a moment of a group of people engaged in a traditional cultural activity. The central focus is a large circular rug with a green and gold border, which appears to be the center of the gathering. The rug is adorned with various objects, including what looks like a drum set and other musical instruments, suggesting a musical performance or ritual.

The people in the image are dressed in traditional clothing, which includes white garments and head coverings, indicating a cultural or religious significance to the event. Their postures and expressions suggest a sense of focus and dedication to the activity at hand.

The photograph is taken from a slightly elevated angle, providing a comprehensive view of the scene. The background is blurred, drawing attention to the central activity and the people involved. The lighting is soft, with a warm tone that enhances the colors and textures of the objects and the clothing.

There is a watermark text overlay on the image that reads "© The Sultanate of Oman Digital Archives," indicating the source and ownership of the photograph. The watermark is small and unobtrusive, ensuring the focus remains on the cultural event.

Zār is a possession cult found primarily in Northeast Africa and the Middle East, in Ethiopia, Sudan, Egypt, Somalia, Eritrea, and also in Iran. The term Zār designates both the spirit and the ritual associated with it. It is believed that certain illnesses, states of hysteria, or melancholy are caused by Zār spirits that have "settled" in a person. The ritual, conducted by women or shamans, involves music, dance, trance, drums, sacrifices, and perfumes (to please the spirit). Healing occurs when the spirit is appeased and "agrees" to coexist without causing harm. The Zār are conceived as spirits of the air, often of foreign origin (Ethiopian, Turkish, Arab, etc.), reflecting ancient layers of syncretism between African, Semitic, and Islamic religions.

>In all Afroasiatic civilizations, the memory persists of intermediary, subtle entities, made of breath and fire, which inhabit the air between worlds, the invisible domain where the spirit moves like the wind. The Zār of Northeast Africa, the Djinn of Islam, the Dybbukim of the Kabbalah, and even the riding spirits of Voodoo and the East represent, under diverse names, a single ontological category: pneumatic beings, residues or reflections of ancient cosmic powers. In origin, these powers belonged to the order of the air daimones, the "wind spirits" of the Semites and proto-Africans, which translate the vital breath (ruach, pneuma, ka, ashe) as the vehicle of consciousness. When mankind distanced itself from the spiritual center, these intermediaries, once messengers and guardians of the spheres, became unstable and fallen, acting in a possessive manner, like wandering fragments of the universal soul.

>The Jewish Dybbuk is a soul deviated from the cycle of Gilgul, incapable of reintegrating itself; the Zār is a foreign wind that penetrates the body and disturbs its harmony; the Djinn, an aerial fire between the angelic and the demonic; and the exorcist or Baal Shem, heir to the primordial theurgy, seeks to restore the spirit to its place in the order. In all cases, it is a matter of an imbalance of subtle influences, a loss of correspondence between the human microcosm and the celestial macrocosm. These forces can be seen as degenerate echoes of the ancient "zodiacal spirits," the intelligences that governed the twelve signs and their seventy-two subdivisions, the "archons of the circle," which later occultist symbolism reinterpreted as the 72 genii or wind demons. Thus, modern accounts of possession, exorcism, and reincarnation would be nothing but residual manifestations of a sacred science that saw in the cosmos a hierarchy of breaths, and in man the mirror where these winds converge.

The primordial breath is the first emanation of Being, the vehicle through which the One expresses itself in the manifold. In all superior traditions, from the Sufi Nafas ar-Rahmān to the Hellenic pneuma and the Hebrew ruah, the breath is the animating principle that transmits life to forms, the vibration that makes the cosmos breathe. This breath, which in primordial states flowed uninterrupted between the divine Intellect and the manifested world, became progressively fragmented as the intermediary hierarchies, the secondary Logoi, daimones, angels, and archons, assumed an autonomous role in the chain of manifestation. Air, in this sense, is not the physical element, but the symbol of the subtle substance that links spirit to matter, the universal mediator that makes communication between the high and the low possible. The ancients spoke of seventy-two "winds", equivalent to the zodiacal archons or decans, sidereal powers that regulated the flow of the cosmic soul through the twelve signs. Each wind corresponded to a specific divine "puff," a mode of vibration of the Logos's energy in the world. After the "fall" or twisting of the emanation, that is, when the intermediary functors began to operate as autonomous centers, forgetting their unitive origin, these winds became dispersed and inverted. What was once the harmonious respiration of the anima mundi became a cacophony of disconnected astral currents: from this arise demonic influences, djinn, prethas, dybbukim, and all forms of possession and psychic imbalance.

On the metaphysical plane, this twisting of the breath is identical to the emergence of matter, the "reflection" of spirit that believes itself to be substance. The lunar, feminine, receptive and reflective principle becomes the vehicle of densification; the mirror turns upon itself and tries to shine without the sun. The "black cube," a symbol of the state of spiritual coagulation, represents this imprisonment of the breath within form, where the circular movement of cosmic respiration converts into inorganic stagnation. The "fall" is nothing but the collapse of the universal breath: the instant when the rhythm of divine life ceases to be recognized within beings. On the path of reintegration, every initiatory way, be it the Ario-Atlantean gnosis, the Palamite doctrine of energeia, or the Sufi dhikr, seeks to restore the rhythm of the breath. To return to the respiration of the Nafas ar-Rahmān is to reopen the channel between the center and the periphery, to reconcile the dispersed wind with the Spirit that emitted it. Thus, to understand air as a symbol is to understand the mode by which Being makes itself present: the pneuma, the ruah, the prana, all are faces of the same vital principle, which, when rediscovered and centralized, dissolves the illusory duality and reestablishes the perfect circulation of light in the cosmos.

The Counter-Earth discussion came about after being asked to rectify the dichotomy of the old geocentric world models, with modern heliocentric cosmology, and the concept of "falls". Made a prediction based (in part) off understanding of the harmony of the spheres and the Pythagorean music system, that Geo-Earth was the fractured wave portion of our wave-particle duality, encompassing the breakdown of binaural consciousness related by Julian Jaynes, and the lost anima or animus or even twin soul many long for. Furthermore this world would "exist" in the probability fields of wave function, the waters, or aether, and be opposite to our world, especially the order of planets. Nature as female dominant and positive.

Now it's a pretty detailed description, turns out exactly this is a very old idea that was common knowledge in the ancient world, with ample evidence of such, and still appears in modern science, UFO lore, and pop culture. I was amazed.

First significant find was in an old freemason book anon posted to the thread detailing the hebes most advanced kabbalah text, and its account of creation. (picrel)

>The idea that a twin world to Earth might lie forever out of our view can be traced back to the Greek natural philosophy concept of Antichthon (literally opposite, or against, Earth). While the term could be used to describe the parts of the Earth's surface which were unknown or beyond reach, such as the antipodes, it was applied to other worlds. The philosopher Philolaus and others of the Pythagorean school proposed that Earth orbited a "central fire". Antichthon in this conception was a second world which also orbited the same point, but was perpetually out of view of Earth's inhabitants. This world may have been introduced in Philolaus' cosmological model to explain some lunar eclipses. However regardless of its practicalities, such a planet was called for by a philosophical system which required certain symmetries and harmonies in its picture of the world, for example favouring ten objects orbiting the central fire rather than nine. However, as a site forever-unobservable, this world also served as a potential location for mythical creatures and aspects of Greek thought which were not present in the real world.

The middle section of the image shows a map with a title "Map of Krypton" and a subtitle "Showing all places mentioned in the Krypton Chronicles." The map is divided into two sections, one labeled "Old World" and the other "New World," with the Earth positioned in the center. The map is colored in shades of blue and green, with the Earth's continents and oceans depicted in detail.

The rightmost section of the image features a promotional poster for a television show. The poster is titled "Doctor Who" and includes a stylized depiction of a character with a blue and white costume, resembling the Doctor Who character from the British science fiction television series. The character is surrounded by a blue and white circle, which could be interpreted as a portal or a gateway. The text on the poster reads "Doctor Who" and "The New World," suggesting that the show is set in a new universe or a new era.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of vintage science fiction movie posters, with a focus on space exploration and adventure. The use of bold colors and detailed imagery is typical of the genre.

The image is a schematic representation of a solar system, with the sun at the center and various celestial bodies surrounding it. The solar system is divided into four quadrants, each labeled with a letter: L1, L2, L3, and L4. The sun is depicted as a bright yellow circle with a central point, surrounded by a ring of smaller circles that represent the planets.

The planets are depicted as small, circular objects with varying shades of blue and red, indicating their distance from the sun. They are arranged in a circular pattern around the sun, with the planets closest to the sun being the most prominent and the planets farthest away being the least prominent.

The image also includes arrows pointing towards the planets, indicating their relative positions to the sun. The arrows are labeled with the letter "L" for each planet, which corresponds to the labels on the quadrants.

The image is a visual representation of the solar system, providing a clear and organized depiction of the celestial bodies and their positions relative to each other.

REPORT ON NUMERICAL EXPERIMENT ON THE POSSIBLE EXISTENCE OF AN "ANTI-EARTH,"
BY DR. R. L. DUNCOMBE,
U.S. NAVAL OBSERVATORY

To experimentally determine the dynamical effects of a planet located on the other side of the Sun from the Earth, an extra body was introduced at this position in the initial conditions for a simultaneous numerical integration of the equations of motions for the major planets of the solar system.

The numerical integration used was the Stumpf-Schubart program, described in Publications of the Astronomischen Rechen-Institut, Heidelberg, No. 18 (1966). The calculations were performed on an IBM 360/40 computer at the U. S. Naval Observatory.

The initial coordinates and velocities were derived from those given in the above reference by integrating the system to the desired epoch. All the planets from Venus to Pluto were included; the mass of Mercury was included with that of the Sun. On runs in which the anti-Earth planet, Clarion, was included, its initial coordinate and velocity vectors were taken to be the negative of those for the Earth-Moon barycenter at epoch.

The initial epoch was J.D. 21424 0000.5 and the integration, using a 2 day step length, was done backward to J.D. 2240 0000.5, a period of approximately 112 years. From the integrated coordinates an ephemeris was generated at a 240 day interval.

Since the principal perturbations occur in longitude, the following discussion of the three cases is confined to a description of the amplitude of the differences in this coordinate.

The central part of the cover features a stylized illustration of a woman in a flowing dress. She appears to be floating above a blue and yellow swirl, which is the main visual element of the cover. The woman is depicted with a serene expression and is holding a small globe in her hand. The globe is colored in shades of blue and green, and it has a white outline.

At the bottom of the cover, there is a small black text that reads "52:130" and "50c URBANRODED." The cover also includes a small black text that says "New York Times Book Review" and "The New York Times Book Review" again, indicating the publication's review in the New York Times.

The overall style of the image is graphic and artistic, with a focus on the cover's central illustration and the text. The use of bold colors and the stylized illustration give the cover

>Your Earth has a dead twin that shares her orbit and is placed so exactly opposite the Earth that it can never be seen. Theories about the Earth's dark twin, which does exist, have been around for decades. They emerged because of the observed perturbations of the planets. This twin is close enough, within your Solar System, to be visible by the reflected rays from the Sun, if it were not hidden behind the Sun. Why do these matched planets place themselves exactly opposite? Put two ball bearings in a circular track and spin this, and you soon find that the balls are opposite each other. Just so do these two evenly matched planets find this position opposite each other.

The image is a vintage movie poster for the film "Journey to the Far Side of the Sun." The poster features a large depiction of Earth with a sun positioned above it, suggesting a journey to the sun. The poster is divided into three sections, each with a different illustration.

In the top left section, there is a close-up of a man's face with a determined expression, accompanied by the text "Man has conquered the moon with the epic Apollo 11 flight! Now take another momentous journey!" This suggests a sense of adventure and the importance of space exploration.

The top right section shows a close-up of a spacecraft with a sun-like glow around it, indicating the journey to the sun. The spacecraft is depicted in a sleek, metallic design, and the sun is depicted with a bright yellow color, suggesting a journey to the sun's surface.

The bottom section of the poster features a close-up of a man's face with a determined expression, accompanied by the text "YOU will meet a man in the far side of the sun in outer space! In other words, you will meet a man in outer space!" This section emphasizes the journey to the sun and the possibility of meeting a man in outer space. The background of the poster is a dark blue with stars and a nebula, which adds to the cosmic theme of the poster. The text is in bold, red and white colors, and the overall style of the poster is reminiscent of science fiction or space exploration films from the 1960s or 1970s.

"The counter-earth plays a crucial role in this system as the tenth body, fulfilling the Pythagorean reverence for the number ten as the sacred tetractys, symbolizing cosmic completeness. Positioned diametrically opposite Earth relative to the central fire, the Antichthon remains unseen from Earth, which aligns with the model's explanation for the invisibility of the central fire itself. This configuration also accounts for certain lunar eclipses by positing that the counter-earth occasionally takes the place of Earth in alignments with the Moon.[1][5] This cosmological framework is primarily attributed to Philolaus of Croton (c. 470–385 BCE), a prominent member of the Pythagorean school, though it draws from the broader teachings of Pythagoras (c. 570–495 BCE), who emphasized numerical mysticism and cosmic harmony. The model's philosophical underpinnings stem from the Pythagorean belief in the universe as an ordered whole governed by mathematical principles, where limiters and unlimiteds combine to produce structured reality, avoiding the notion of a perfectly central Earth that might imply undue privilege to humanity. By centering the cosmos on fire—the source of life and motion—Philolaus integrated ethical and metaphysical ideas, portraying the universe as a harmonious system reflective of divine proportion."

The image displays a stylized emblem with a pentagram at its center, which is a common symbol in Satanism. The pentagram is composed of five intersecting lines, with the top line being the longest and the bottom line being the shortest. Within the pentagram, there is a depiction of a goat-headed demon, which is a significant element in Satanic symbolism. The goat-headed demon is facing forward, and its horns are pointed upwards, suggesting a sense of power or dominance.

Surrounding the pentagram, there are four smaller pentagrams, each containing a different letter of the alphabet. These letters are arranged in a circular pattern around the central pentagram, creating a sense of symmetry and balance. The letters are arranged in a clockwise direction, which is a common orientation for the letters of the alphabet in many cultures.

The background of the emblem is black, which contrasts with the white elements of the emblem, making the pentagram and the goat-headed demon stand out prominently.

The emblem is set against a black background, which further emphasizes the white elements and the pentagram.

There is no text present in the image, and the style of the emblem is reminiscent of traditional Satanic or occult symbolism, often used in clothing, tattoos, or other forms of body art. The emblem is a stylized representation of the pentagram, with the goat-headed demon as the central figure, and the surrounding letters representing the alphabet. The overall design is symmetrical and balanced, with a strong emphasis on the pentagram and the goat-headed demon.

Of note Counter Earth is not congruent with modern astrophysics, but the US Navy actually ran a series of experiments in the 60's to test the hypothesis, so their information at that time must have indicated the idea was at least possible, perhaps old mason texts similar to the one I posted that the moron couldn't decipher?

>From a modern astronomical perspective, a Counter-Earth at the Sun-Earth L3Lagrange point would be dynamically unstable due to gravitational perturbations from nearby planets like Venus, which approaches within 25 million miles every 584 days and shares 80% of Earth's mass, inevitably disrupting the orbit over time. Such a body would also induce measurable effects on the orbits of Mercury, Mars, comets, and even artificial satellites, none of which have been observed despite precise monitoring by space agencies like NASA. Newton's law of universal gravitation further demonstrates that no stable equilibrium exists for an Earth-mass object in this configuration, as mutual influences would cause orbital chaos rather than perpetual alignment.

Not all are going to make it, perhaps not even most.

Theirs is to repeat the grade they failed lest they end up like Jews who cheated ahead through transhumanistic means and now find themselves stuck in a functionally alien world. Only you can decide if you fall for their tricks.

The curse (picrel linked post) was made on the original Earth at the time of the fall by the demiurge, implication is it's the world of "serpents", not in a literal sense. Throughout Aryan tradition there is a link between water spirits (wave-function, abzu) and serpents, the Lady of the Lake in Arthurian myth for example.

>And the Lord God said unto the serpent, Because thou hast done this, thou art cursed above all cattle, and above every beast of the field; upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life:

>And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel.

>Unto the woman he said, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children; and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee.

And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life;

>Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field;

In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return.

>And the Lord God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil: and now, lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live for ever:

Therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken.

>So he drove out the man; and he placed at the east of the garden of Eden Cherubims, and a flaming sword which turned every way, to keep the way of the tree of life.

>The history of the Nagas that we do have, textually beginning around the 7th century

BC is an amazing history of ups and downs. It parallels the rise and fall of the serpent worshipped by the Semites, with the Brazen Serpent being raised in the wilderness and then broken up in the temple. Like Melusine and Sibillia, Tante Arie also loved to plunge into cool pools in her caverns of Milandre where she changed into a vouivre or serpent; bringing to mind the concept that the shape-shifting Nagas of India which were said to reside in the underwater realms. Surely these ladies of ancient lore are folk memories of serpent worshipping leaders from the past - and a positively feminine one at that. A Buddha from a past age tossed a lotus seed into its placid waters, and from this grew an amazing thousand-petalled lotus that shone with the blue light of transcendental wisdom.

>Aeons went by. And then, one day, the Bodhisattva Manjusri, a central Asian version of Apollo, who, having heard tales of the lotus and its light, arrived at the lotus lake to contemplate its splendour. He stopped at the edge, and being thwarted by the nagas, found that he could not approach the lotus. However, after consulting with Vajra Yogini, a manifestation of Dolma/Tara the mother goddess, he decided on a radical plan. He would drain the lake, bind the nagas and thereby share the lotus light with everyone.

>these legends, we can see echoes of our primal theme. The Blue Light Lotus is the ancient primal center, dislodged by a catastrophe caused by the Tibetan Sun-God Manjusri. This center is then represented, in the same spot, by a stupa, an arrangement of the elemental shapes into an "omphallos" like locator stone/tree. This same stupa/pagoda design, seen in the architecture of the original Kasthamandap, can be found throughout Buddhist Asia, from China to Burma. In the original hidden valley of Nepal, the place of refuge was clearly a magically constructed model of the World Tree. View SameGoogleiqdbSauceNAOTrace EimhQkWXcAEUOuU.jpg, 41KiB, 464x317 dimension. Patala is often translated as underworld or netherworld. Patala is described as more beautiful than Svarga (subtle dimensions, loosely translated as heaven). Patala is described as filled with splendid jewels, beautiful groves and lakes."

"The Bhagavata Purana calls the seven lower regions bila-svargas ("subterranean heavens") and they are regarded as planets or planetary systems below the earth. These regions are described as being more opulent than the upper heavenly regions of the universe. The life here is of pleasure, wealth and luxury, with no distress. The asura architect Maya has constructed palaces, temples, houses, yards and hotels for foreigners, with jewels. The natural beauty of Patala is said to surpass that of Svarga. There is no sunlight in the lower realms, but the darkness is dissipated by the shining of the jewels that the residents of Patala wear. There is no old age, no sweat, no disease in Patala."

"Patala or Nagaloka is the lowest realm and the region of the Nagas, ruled by Vasuki (the snake that hangs around Shiva's neck). Here live several Nagas with many hoods. Each of their hoods is decorated by a jewel, a source of light of which illuminates this realm"

There is obvious syncretism with European otherworld myths, sidhe etc. and Agarthā/Shambhalla.

"Agarthā (variously spelled as Agharta, Aghartta, Agharti, among many other spellings) is a legendary kingdom that is said to be located on the inner surface of the Earth. Though the exact story varies, as there are many different versions, it is usually said to be located in Central Asia and led by a powerful figure sometimes called the King of the World, who secretly influences the surface. It is related to the belief in a hollow Earth and has been a popular subject in esotericism, occultism, and the New Age since the late 19th century."

Manjusri again.

"In the narrative, King Manjuśrīkīrti is said to have been born in 159 BC and ruled over a kingdom of 300,510 followers of the Mlechha religion, some of whom worshiped the Sun. He is said to have expelled 20,000 people from his domain who clung to Surya Samadhi (solar worship) rather than convert to Kalachakra (Wheel of Time) Buddhism. After realizing these were the wisest and best of his people and how much he was in need of them, he later asked them to return and some did. Those who did not return are said to have set up the city of Shambhala. This part I find most interesting, relates to this lost source code, powers or siddhe, which is too similar to sidhe for coincidence.

"Patala is associated with the Kriyātantras, which are associated with the kīla, the phenomenon of the tertön and terma and water magic and with the attainment of vidyādhara (Chinese: 仙, 仙; pinyin: xiān) status. These practices have been largely ignored after the early period of Tibetan Buddhism and Tangmibu but originally were popular."

The image is a graphic design featuring the cover art for the album "Mothership" by the band Led Zeppelin. The central element is a stylized depiction of a large, red and white airship with the text "Mothership" written in large, bold, red letters. The airship is positioned above a building with a clock tower, which is depicted in a stylized, geometric style. The background is a deep red with a black outline, and there are white lines radiating outward from the airship, creating a sense of movement and energy. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of propaganda posters or posters from the 1960s, with a bold, graphic design that emphasizes the band's name and the theme of the album.

From the last thread but worth reposting for relevancy.

The sealed door of the Padmanabhaswamy Temple remains one of India's most enduring mysteries, a gateway that has resisted time, technology, and even human will. No one has opened it. No one knows for certain what lies behind it. But many believe the truth is more astonishing than anything we could imagine.

A door with no locks—and no key

Among the temple's eight known vaults, most have been opened over time. But one—known only as Chamber B—remains completely sealed. Unlike the other vaults, it has no hinges, no bolts, and no visible way to open it. It's guarded by carved images of two massive cobras, and cloaked in legend that warns of dire consequences should anyone attempt to force it open.

According to local tradition, the door was sealed in ancient times by powerful sound vibrations, using a chant that has since been lost to history. It's said that only a high-level sadhu—a spiritual ascetic—who knows the sacred Garuda Mantra can open the door. And today, no one is believed to possess the knowledge or authority to do so.

>It is believed that this gate is sealed by a Naga Bandhana or Naga Paasam — the process of tying up something valuable with a frieze of nagas, serpents of the cobra variety. It is essentially a tantrika (occult) form of worship or tantrika process, supposedly of the Atharva Veda origin. The procedure is not to be found in any written form. It is highly secretive and known only to a few Siddha Yogis (great saints) who live or once lived in Siddhashram, a secret and mystical land deep in the Himalayas.

>According to many, the Naga Bandhana are mechanisms of locks that work with the voice waves of a particular person, when it says a specific spell, which produces small vibrations that trigger these mechanisms and the door opens. It is said that if another person tries to open the door with a different spell or a different voice then the sound waves will change direction waking up the evil and causing the attack of snakes that may be nearby, or it may be ended up with terrible misfortune.

"A divine child will born"

>By this belief, the saints say that a child with such divine knowledge will be born in India who will be able to execute these sacred chants of the Mantra and thus the secret vault will be uncovered without human effort giving all the secrets and mysterious treasures that it withholds for ages.

Related, this happened years ago, near the lowest point, creeping in at the edge of my awareness was the thought the devil was down a hole, a snake hole specifically.

Time passed, as it tends to, found myself in disagreement with the ex. Think at this stage I'd spent a few days away from home and was tired, so lay down in the railway park in town and slept.

Dreamed of a snake, that we were struggling, fighting. Then the dream kicked up a level into lucidity. Was dreaming of me having a dream battle with a snake, like looking down on the initial dream from a higher perspective.

From here I could see the struggle more clearly, if snake woke first it would bite me, if I woke first I would win. Also realised it was real and woke up with a massive spasm and scream, whole body convulsed and a brown snake, around 1.3 m long, was flung off me and struck at my head in the air, missed, then slithered off underneath a nearby cafe.

Hair on my arms stood on end for the next two days, no joke scared the shit outta me, was sleeping on me, head tucked up near mine, tail curled down my leg. Now this is Australia, snakes in town are not uncommon in the north, but never heard of this, sleeping bags perhaps in urban myth.

Ever see a snake hole? After this I could and they were everywhere, stood right out, obvious. To be fair this particular area laid claim to one of the highest snake densities in Aus, and we have more of the bastards than anywhere else on Earth. But never noticed them before and there they were. Along with this came comprehension of the geas or glamour, an inclination to not look at these holes directly, the gaze wandering around the edges and mind filling in the gap, feet likewise going around but not in. Seems similar to the nagabandha, the snake binding on dimensional portals, or the same. View SameOCRGoogleiqdbSauceNAOTrace Babylon's_world_view.jpg, 137KiB, 1280x901

Two types of waters. Tiamat, bitter waters of the ocean, primordial chaos, the dragon mother of monsters like Typhon. Second type is the Abzu or Apsu fresh waters we have been discussing in relation to nature, life force, hot springs, inner fire, firmament, and aether.

>Tiamat is one of the most significant figures in Babylonian mythology, often depicted as a primordial goddess associated with the saltwater ocean. Her name is synonymous with the chaotic waters that existed before the creation of the world.

>Abzu or Apsu is also the name of the fresh water in underground aquifers, which were given a religious fertilizing quality in Sumerian and Akkadian mythology. Lakes, springs, rivers, wells, and other sources of fresh water were thought to draw water from the abzu. In this regard, in Sumerian and Akkadian mythology, it referred to the primeval sea beneath the empty space of the underworld (Kur) and the earth (Ma) above.

These two were the originals and mated to produce all the other Gods ie. the waters were originally mingled. Later Tiamat gets pissed and wants to destroy everything.

The moon is artificial, yes, it was built.

We will be entering an euhemerist perspective, so keep in mind that we will be talking about a vast three-dimensional space, with multiple realms and star systems, not the geocentric system. We will be talking about the vast universe, within the understanding of the electrical universe, hollow celestial bodies, etc.

>Most people are fully aware that the Moon is tiny compared to the Sun, but that it is much closer to us, causing them to appear as equal discs. To be precise, the Moon is 400 times smaller than the star at the centre of our solar system, yet it is also just 1/400th of the distance between the Earth and the Sun. Whilst the surprisingly neat number of 400 for relative size and distance is apparently an amusing coincidence of the decimal counting system, the odds against this optical illusion happening at all are huge. Experts are deeply puzzled by the phenomenon. Isaac Asimov, the respected scientist and science-fiction guru, described this perfect visual alignment as being "the most unlikely coincidence imaginable." This perfect fit of the lunar and solar discs is a very human perspective because it only works from the viewpoint of someone standing on the Earth's surface. But the magic of the Moon's movements above our heads goes to even more astonishing levels. By some absolutely incomprehensible quirk of nature, the Moon also manages to precisely imitate the perceived annual movements of the Sun each month.

>The connection between human fertility and the cycles of the Moon is considered to be 'apparent rather than actual', but it isn't in the least surprising that the possibility of a relationship was noticed by our ancient ancestors. The clincher probably came when someone realized that the average gestation period of a human female, from conception to birth, is around 266 days – or nine full lunar synodic cycles. In a social and a religious sense, fertility undoubtedly played a crucial part in the lives of the people at the time the Venus of Laussel was carved. It is more or less universally accepted that female deities were important to human culture for thousands of years of prehistory. Statues of pregnant women with exaggerated genitals and breasts are common from the Palaeolithic to the Neolithic periods, and there are strong indications of the existence of a fertility-based deity who has come down to us as 'The Great Goddess'. The Venus of Laussel could quite easily be a representation of this deity, complete with a representation of the heavenly body with which she was equated – the Moon.

There was a solar incursion, probably during the Atlantean era, of the Apkallu teachers, the Bene-Elohim, Elektrozoa, the original Aryans who imparted the knowledge of sacred writing. The primordial lunar goddess is the material system itself personified, Samsara, the illusion of Maya.

>The switch from a powerful female deity, often equated with the Moon, to solar-based masculine deities seems to have taken place at about the same time humanity began to discover writing.

Attributed to Irwin Shapiro of The Harvard-Smithsonian Center for Astrophysics

>The Big Whack cannot explain the extraordinary ratio relationship between the Moon and the Sun or the Moon and the Earth. The Moon could, by pure chance, end up being exactly 1/400th the size of the Sun and occupying an orbit that allows it to stand 1/400th the distance between the Earth and the Sun – but the odds are, quite literally, astronomically against it. The Moon is proportionally bigger in relation to its host planet than any other in the solar system, apart from Charon, Pluto's moon, which is more than half the diameter of Pluto. These two bodies are essentially twin planets or may be asteroids orbiting each other at close range, although they are believed to have an unrelated origin. Mercury has no moons at all, and neither has Venus. Mars does have two moons, but they are tiny in comparison with our own.

>NASA reports demonstrate the reaction of scientists on Earth as the Saturn V hit the lunar surface – "The Moon rang like a bell." In November 1969, the Apollo 12 crew had sent their lunar module crashing into the Moon following their return to the command craft after their lunar landing mission. That lunar module had struck with a force of one tonne of TNT, causing the shock waves to build up to a peak in eight minutes and then continue for nearly an hour. The seismic signals produced by the impact from Apollo 13 were twenty to thirty times greater and lasted four times longer than those resulting from the earlier LM crash. This time, peak intensity occurred after seven minutes, and the reverberations lasted for three hours and twenty minutes, travelling to a depth of twenty-five miles. This led to the conclusion that the Moon has an unusually light core or possibly no core at all.

>At the time, Houston remarked to the Apollo 13 crew: "By the way, Aquarius, we see the results now from 12's seismometer. Looks like your booster just hit the Moon, and it's rocking a little bit." NASA reports how the information from these two artificial moonquakes led to a reconsideration of theories proposed about the lunar interior. Among the puzzling features, they say, are the rapid build-up to the peak and the prolonged reverberations, because nothing comparable happens when objects strike Earth.

>Whilst it is true that the extreme polar regions of the Earth are frozen throughout the year, the tilt angle of 22.5 degrees ensures that most parts of the Earth's surface get a fair share of warmth throughout each year. This, in turn, means that by far the vast majority of water on the surface of the planet remains in a liquid state. All of life is utterly dependent on water and cannot exist without it. The band of temperatures at which water is liquid is really very narrow. The oceans of the Earth would freeze at around 1.91°C, with boiling point occurring at 100°C. The Earth is therefore extremely well balanced. The coldest temperature ever recorded was -89.2°C (-128.6°F) at the Vostok Station in Antarctica and the highest was 58°C (136°F) at El Azizia in Libya. That is a range of absolute extremes of less than 148°C, which is very little indeed in terms of the entire spectrum. The coldest anything can get is known as 'absolute zero' when all molecular motion stops. This occurs at a rather chilly -273.15°C (-459.67°F). On the other hand, there is no known upper limit for temperature but the hottest temperature in our solar system is the Sun's core, which comes in at an impressive 15,000,000°C (27,000,000°F).

The book I'm citing is written by a physicalist author who accepts evolutionary interpretations and much of the historiography, stratigraphy, etc. Logically, it's distorted and contaminated by materialist subversion, however, he is correct in identifying that this solar system underwent planetary engineering, something we will observe in the book Saturn Death Cult (not by intelligence, but by natural causes) and in Ringmakers of Saturn... The mistake of those who speak of the theory of the electric universe where our system was captured by the sun is believing that it was purely a natural process; it wasn't. There was a race of forerunners who built this system; Christopher Knight calls them UCA.

>The UCA realized that it needed to draw further attention to the artificial nature of the regulator by building on a truly fundamental number that represented the planet. The number that was chosen was the planet's spin rate per orbit of the star, which would have to be instantly recognizable as a value that was unique to the planet – a natural PIN (personal identification number) for an entire world. So, in this case, it was a Planetary Identification Number that was required. At the required time window, the planet would be rotating at a rate of 366 revolutions for each orbit around its mother star, and the use of the number value 366 would therefore be easily spotted as the Planetary Identification Number.

>The intelligent creatures would recognize the PIN number from an early date, as it requires only very basic astronomy to appreciate that this three-digit number is the most fundamental of all numbers that are unique to the planet. Surely these Earth-dwelling creatures would be very surprised when they calculated the relative size of their planet to the orbiting regulator and discovered that the one is 366 per cent larger than the other. The regulator was also engineered with a PIN number that was meaningful to the intended intelligent creatures. That number would be the reciprocal of the planet's PIN number – the mirror image of 366. The mathematics was simplicity itself. The regulator's PIN number would be arrived at by considering its size as 100 per cent and dividing it by the relative size of the planet, namely 366 per cent. Working to five decimal places, the result is:  $100/366 = 0.27322$

The regulator was then carefully engineered so that at the key point in time it would be orbiting the planet at a rate of once every 27.322 planetary days.

The apparent impossibility of the Neolithic inhabitants having had the skills to develop such a marvellous system is now resolved when we introduce the unknown creative agency because, if it started with knowledge of the dimensions of the two original bodies (the Sun and the Earth), it could have engineered the Moon to make it fit the same rules. Our hypothesis was, therefore, to assume that the UCA somehow instructed the Stone-Age builders to adopt the system we call Megalithic geometry.

Herein lies Knight's biggest problem... He doesn't have access to the information we already have in this thread....

>We cannot hide from the problem that, if our deductions are accurate, our unidentified creative agency has had contact with us at least once over the last 6,000 years. If this agency wished humans to know what they had done – and they (or it) are capable of making contact so recently – then why don't they just turn up right now and tell us what was done in the distant past, instead of leaving messages on the Moon?

Firstly, the matter of the Forerunners, teachers, watchers, is not physicalist; the world has passed from higher states to more material falls, this is verified in various currents; we are densified, coagulated. History is not linear and progressive, evolution is a scientific myth, and historiography and chronology themselves are completely distorted.

That said, the ancient gods that have reached us through distorted records are a deliberate confusion of the good teachers and Aryan ancestors and the demons who need to keep man and the world in this densified state to subsist.

Those who built the Moon are the second option... The Moon is part of the Moon-Saturn system to cycle the divine human spirit and coagulate the divine light/breath in the three-dimensional material world.

The Moon is literally, in both models of existence (geocentric and heliocentric), the fluidic mirror where the "simulation" of the matrix is projected onto the earth, from the computational "calculations" of destiny woven in Saturn. Or vice versa, where it is rendered on the imaginal fluidic plane on the moon and then projected onto Saturn, written in destiny, then descends to earth, "calcifying" samsara.

Let's now look at the book Ringmakers of Saturn.

>Near the end of the 18th century, luminous points were observed on the edge of the ring plane (of saturn). One of these is reported to have moved off its position. None of the luminous points persisted very long (less than 16 hours), thereby negating the possibility of their being satellites. The observer, William Herschel, postulated in 1789 that some sort of unstable source must be responsible, such as an intense fire. Another puzzlement has been the sighting of one arm of the ring when the other arm could not be detected.

>Luminous points continued to be reported by discriminating observers into the 19th century. Again, satellites of Saturn had to be ruled out as none could be located in the vicinity. The most astounding and now famous observations of a light source came in the 20th century on 9 February 1917. Two astronomers, Maurice Ainslie and John Knight of Great Britain, observed the source independently. Brightness of the source was so intense that Ainslie referred to the object as a "star". The star traveled a straight-line course which, in effect, subtended a chord across the ring system. Length of the chord was of the order of 125,000 km (77,700 mi). Observed time to traverse this chordal distance across the ring system was 1 hour and 40 minutes, making the average velocity 21 km/sec (13 mi/sec). This value compares with an average velocity for Voyager en route to Saturn of about 13.7 km/sec (8.5 mi/sec). That is, the star was about 1½ times faster. During the observations when the star was in plain view, the light therefrom appeared to be elongated. There was a strange aspect about the traversal itself. Seeming to move through the ring plane without difficulty, the star appeared to devour material ahead as it proceeded. Further, at no time did the rings completely block out the radiating light.

The image is a photograph of a section of a human eye, with a focus on the retina and the sclera. The retina is labeled with the words "assimi Division" and "Enke Division," indicating the two divisions of the retina. The sclera is labeled with "A-Ring" and "Fan," which likely refer to the outer and inner layers of the sclera, respectively. The image is dark, with a focus on the central part of the eye, which is the retina. The background is blurred, emphasizing the details of the eye.

>Plate 7 shows the formation of the Encke division. In the plate, the A and B rings as well as the Cassini division can be recognized. Once again, a vehicle is found depositing an orbital trail. Efflux emanating primarily from the radially outboard ⅔ of body length is responsible. Clearly, were the vehicle located at a slightly shorter radius, the gap would be lessened. Widths reported for the Encke division range from approximately 200 to 320 km (125 to 200 mi). Nominally, this gap width is equivalent to a variation in orbital radius of only about ¼ of one percent. The implication is that the orbital radius of the vehicle's position is set very precisely in order to produce a gap. Inspection of the vehicle reveals numerous jets issuing from many different positions around and along the body. A fan of three jets appears to form the inboard part of the trailing efflux. Each jet appears to consist of a series of bulbous swellings. Such swellings are indicative of the form of electrically charged flows known as pinched plasmas. The length of the vehicle appears to be about 10 times its diameter. A dark jet crossing the body near the left end makes the vehicle appear as though there are two sections aligned longitudinally. In reality, the vehicle is integrally one. An attempt at sizing yields an apparent length of about 4,700 km (2,900 mi) and a diameter of 470 km (290 mi). Diameters of issuing jets are of the order of 0.1 to 0.2 body diameter, or about 47 to 94 km (29 to 58 mi).

The image is a black and white medical scan, likely a radiograph, showing a section of a human body. The scan is labeled with various anatomical terms and abbreviations. The top left corner has the label "Discontinuity Band," and the top right corner has "Cassini Division." The central part of the image shows a "Luminescent Sources," with arrows pointing to different areas. There are also labels for "A-Ring" and "B-Ring," which are likely referring to the aorta and bicuspid aortic valve respectively. The bottom part of the image shows "Parallel Markings," which likely refers to the parallel lines that are often seen on radiographs. The image is labeled with the names of the anatomical structures and the terms used in radiology, indicating that it is a medical scan.

>Saturn investigations for years have portrayed the ring system as comprised of primordial matter. The utter idea that the rings might be quite young is uncomfortable to primordial advocates because a key assumption is placed in jeopardy. Previous chapters have pictured several different electromagnetic vehicles actually depositing the A and B rings. These fortuitous pictures say not only that the ring material is quite new, but also that continuous regeneration can occur. Conversely, ring extinction by vaporization is a realistic possibility. Vaporization could result consequentially from the immense, high-temperature, luminous, mobile forms which can be generated. Exemplary forms are a fireball larger than Earth's moon (Plate 6) and a lightning stroke almost as long as the State of California. Yet still, these displays of power are fairly modest.

>One of the most massive displays of power is a large-scale disruption in Saturn's rings extending across the entire ring system. Hence, the phenomenon likely is aperiodic and of fairly brief duration – perhaps days, or even hours. In addition to the multicolored band, very narrow parallel markings can be seen extending chordwise across the rings in several locations. Further, two luminous sources appear in the right-hand sector of the rings. is the completely filled Cassini gap. Usually, this gap appears mostly as empty space. An astounding 218,000 km (136,000 mi) is spanned by the colorful band, roughly the equivalent of 17 Earth diameters. Thus, the affected region exceeds the total surface of the Earth, which is about 510 million square kilometers (197 million square miles). Obviously, a disturbance of such great magnitude requires immensely enormous energy. Insight concerning the physical situation in and near the discontinuity band is provided by subsequent plates presenting enlargements embracing localities at points labeled 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5.

The image is a circular diagram with a pink background and a black border. It features a stylized representation of a human body, with various anatomical structures labeled.

The structure depicted is a nasal cavity, which is the central focus of the image.

At the top of the image, there is a list of labels, each corresponding to a different part of the nasal cavity. The labels are as follows:

1. 1. Cylindrical body
2. 2. Axial
3. 3. Nose trailing streamer
4. 4. Body trailing streamer
5. 5. Nose trailing streamer
6. 6. Nose trailing streamer
7. 7. Body trailing streamer
8. 8. Nose trailing streamer
9. 9. Nose trailing streamer
10. 10. Nose trailing streamer

The image is labeled "Plate 31" at the bottom, indicating that it is part of a larger document or publication. The text is in English and is written in a serif font, which is commonly used for formal or academic documents. The style of the image is illustrative and educational, likely used to teach or explain the structure of the human nasal cavity.

>Evidence is 100 percent positive that propulsive vehicles generate the inner- and outer-Enke A rings of Saturn.

>A cylindrical body, (1), emits a faint axial exhaust flame, (2), of probable extremely high temperature. The diameter of the exhaust orifice is about 1/2 body diameter. Aft of the nose, about a body-diameter distant, is located a bilateral projection, (3). This projection might be likened to wings on an airplane. Below the projection is positioned a lengthy bank of underbody emissions or flame jets, (4). In frontal view, these jets would extend radially outward from beneath the body at a probable angle of about 45 degrees. Immersed in, but extending out of, the flame bank is a tightly entwined tongue, (5). The length of the tongue is at least 2 body diameters and has the capability within itself to project emissions or plumes. Atop the body nose, just aft of the axial exhaust flame, a bulbar pinched streamer, (6), flows upward and aft. Other streamers, (7) and (8), also flow aft. Streamer (8) starts at the body, but streamer (7) commences from a lateral projection. Streamer (6) shows an ability to branch directly forward. At the nose, ahead of the foreground lateral projection, a small jet (9) is emitted, which jumps or "shorts" to the projection. This phenomenon illustrates the presence of different electrical potential (voltage) levels and demonstrates the mechanism that governs flow paths. Also in this same vicinity, numerous small radial emissions occur around the exhaust cowl. The hub labeled (10) acts as a collector to coalesce beginning streamers. Coalescence forms an embryonic streamer which ultimately bursts forth. In this chapter, cylindrical propulsive bodies of approximate fineness ratio 13 have been pictured with lengths ranging from 1 to 4 Earth diameters.

The image is a close-up photograph of a celestial object, which appears to be a planet or moon, with a textured surface. The object is surrounded by a dark background, which contrasts with the object's surface. The surface of the object has a rough, uneven texture, with some areas appearing darker and more rugged than others.

There are several lines and markings on the surface of the object, which could be interpreted as lines of latitude and longitude, indicating the position of the object in the sky. These lines are drawn in a grid-like pattern, with numbers and symbols indicating the latitude and longitude.

In the upper right corner of the image, there is a small, circular object with a textured surface, resembling a piece of jewelry or a small figurine. The object is attached to a wooden stick, which extends upwards and outwards, suggesting it might be a part of a larger structure or decoration.

The image is labeled with numbers and symbols, which are likely to represent specific features or attributes of the celestial object. However, without additional context or knowledge of the language used in the labels, it is not possible to determine the exact meaning of these numbers and symbols.

Overall, the image provides a detailed view of a celestial object, with a focus on its texture and the markings that indicate its position in the sky. The presence of the jewelry-like object and the wooden stick suggests that the image may be part of a larger display or exhibit.

Dione and Iapetus both have been subjected to the burning fury of visitation from an electromagnetic vehicle. Each has experienced topographical structuring caused by various emissions which these high-potential units possess. In the case of Iapetus, structuring can be deduced to be much more than a surface phenomenon. In being subjected to the observed electro-potential field, electrical currents enter Iapetus, converge within the interior, then exit. Surface-distributed entry currents combine to reach a large magnitude near the center. Simultaneously, a situation also is created whereby extraneous material is shed at the surface as current shafts enter the satellite. This latter situation is supported by photographic observations of dark material on the periphery of Iapetus where current paths have been found to enter. Besides deposits, visitations are evidenced by a wide assortment of surface scars. Most familiar are craters of widely ranging diameters. Other scars are in the form of rills, ridges, and thermo-set areas having surfaces of indistinct features. Dione exhibits mostly distinct craters, rills, and ridges, whereas Iapetus displays a dimpled surface with indistinct features. Differences can be attributed to the particular vehicle component creating the scar and the amount of attendant heating. For a given electromagnetic vehicle, the maximum diameter for a round scar (e.g., a crater) would be a size approximating the vehicle body diameter. Because these spacecraft have long-range cruise capability, any solar-system body becomes a suspect candidate for having experienced visitations.

>Ancient lunar presence of an electromagnetic vehicle at Mare Orientale can resolve other perplexities concerning the moon. Discovery that the unorthodox sectorial illumination of Iapetus is attributable directly to the presence of an encompassing electro-potential field leads to a tentative conclusion about the long-extinct lunar magnetic field. Specifically, the conclusion is reached that the moon has, at some time, experienced the same treatment as Iapetus. According to Plates 44 and 45, an identifiable time at which the moon has undergone magnetizing influences is from an electromagnetic vehicle while forming Mare Orientale. That electromagnetic vehicles are connected anciently to lunar formations distinctly opens a strong possibility of a past intimacy with Earth. Implications to this effect already have been signaled by terrestrial rocks which date back to about the same birth date as Mare Orientale. A lunar connection with electromagnetic vehicles neither abrogates nor conflicts with data obtained from moon-orbiter missions and landing excursions. This integral posture is much more substantial than concepts which explain prehistoric data only for narrow circumstances.

>Presence of electromagnetic vehicles (E.M.V.'s) in the outer solar system forces attention on an extraordinary potential hazard of manned space flight not considered heretofore. E.M.V.'s can be expected to pose an extreme hazard to manned space flight in the vicinity of Saturn and Uranus, and probably even as near to Earth as Mars. Some pictures of Mars suggest visitations by E.M.V.'s. However, known presence of E.M.V.'s serves a substantial warning to space travelers at least to stay their distance. Failure to heed this warning could result in catastrophe and emotional unpleasantness much worse than that which resulted from the explosion of space-shuttle Challenger.

If the builders of the Moon are evil, and the solar gods that came later are a deliberate confusion, who remains?

The answer lies in what we call the "good instructors and aryan ancestors." They would be neither "lunar" nor "solar" in the later, corrupted sense of these terms. They would belong to a prior and superior order, perhaps associated with a pre-lunar and pre-material state of consciousness (the "Pelasgians" and "Proselenes" of legend).

Their symbol, therefore, would not be the Sun or the Moon of our current sky (which are pieces of the machine), but something like:

- >The "Black Light" or "Black Sun" (a spiritual, non-physical sun).
- >The "Polar Star" (a fixed axis outside the system of cycles).
- >The "Void" or "The Source" prior to the creation of the material Matrix.

In the sky of this simulation, solar archetypes are presented as the "good" alternative to the "evil" lunar ones. But the true exit, according to the text's radical cosmology, lies in rejecting the entire artificial sky and seeking the origin that is prior and external to it. >Consequently, sacred alphabets are not mere vehicles for writing, but systems of vibrational engineering. Each rune or Sanskrit syllable functions as a glyph of resonance, a key intended to actuate specific forces within the fabric of reality. The myth of Odin discovering the runes while suspended from the World Tree, or the Rishis 'hearing' the Vedas in deep meditation, describes a contact with this supra-human intelligence, a download of a symbolic operating system. The confusion of tongues, recounted in the myth of Babel, signifies not a divine punishment, but the deliberate fragmentation of this unified system to prevent access to the 'source code' of creation. The various sacred alphabets, Futhark, Sanskrit, Ogham, etc, are the surviving lineages of this original Adamantine Language. Therefore, the ultimate purpose of the initiate is not merely to study these symbols, but to reassemble the fragments and reactivate their function, thereby resynchronizing with the cosmic transmitters from whom this knowledge first emanated.

"Accomplishments may be attained through birth, the use of herbs, incantations, self-discipline orsamadhi"

Many high level meditators say the powers just don't function anymore, often pointing towards collective disbelief as culpable. Self-discipline or samadhi are proven failures en-masse, although likely components, something else is missing. Herbs and incantations are lost. Yet there is still the rare anomaly, the odd story or experience that disagrees with the materialist interpretation, knows magic still exists beneath the obscurity.

If this source code is a deep universal truth, being delusional and impure may preclude finding such, especially if gate kept by supernatural beings. Perhaps the breath will never circulate properly whilst living a lie, a hard task in these days of deception, but not impossible.

Buddha was said to have used metta up to the fourth jhana, then followed the threefold path, which just seems to exclude some of the other powers mentioned in their doctrine, but requires the same process.

>The second way is the way the Buddha's own awakening process unfolded. He went to the fourth jhāna and then: (1) he remembered his past lives; (2) he visited other realms and saw how and why beings were reborn there; and finally, (3) he saw how kamma works, how causes create more causes, in a never ending wheel that leads to old age and death. Disenchantment and dispassion arose through this knowledge, and Nibbāna was attained. This way is called the "threefold knowledge" or tevijja. That is (1) knowledge of past lives, (2) knowledge of beings in other realms, and (3) knowledge of the destruction of the taints — Nibbāna.

Another auxiliary text would be "The Fire Kasina".

"The Path of Purification (Visuddhimagga)"

The Visuddhimagga is the 'great treatise' on Buddhist practice and Theravāda Abhidhamma written by Buddhaghosa approximately in the 5th century in Sri Lanka. It is a manual condensing and systematizing the 5th century understanding and interpretation of the Buddhist path as maintained by the elders of the Mahavihara Monastery in Anuradhapura, Sri Lanka.

"THE PATH OF FREEDOM (Vimuttimagga)"

The Vimuttimagga ("Path of Freedom") is a Buddhist practice manual, traditionally attributed to the Arahant Upatissa (c. 1st or 2nd century). It was translated into Chinese in the sixth century as the Jietuo dao lun by Sanghapala. The original text (possibly Pali or Buddhist Hybrid Sanskrit) is no longer extant, but the work has survived in Chinese. The book was probably written in India and then later brought to Sri Lanka. >In Theravada Buddhism, kasiṇa is the Pali word for class of basic visual objects of meditation. There are ten kasiṇa mentioned in the Pali Tipitaka:

earth (paṭhavī kasiṇa),

water (āpo kasiṇa),

air, wind (vāyo kasiṇa),

fire (tejo kasiṇa),

blue, green (nīla kasiṇa),

yellow (pīṭa kasiṇa),

red (lohita kasiṇa),

white (odāta kasiṇa),

enclosed space, hole, aperture (ākāsa kasiṇa), bright light (āloka kasiṇa).

The kasiṇa are typically described as a colored disk, with the particular color, properties, dimensions and medium often specified according to the type of kasiṇa. The earth kasiṇa, for instance, is a disk in a red-brown color formed by spreading earth or clay (or another medium producing similar color and texture) on a screen of canvas or another backing material.

Kasina meditation is a concentration meditation (variously known in different traditions as samatha, dhyana, or jhana meditations), intended to settle the mind of the practitioner and create a foundation for further practices of meditation. In the early stages of kasina meditation, a physical object is used as the object of meditation, being focused upon by the practitioner until an eidetic (after-image) image of the object forms in the practitioners mind. In more advanced levels of kasina meditation, only a mental image of the kasina is used as an object of meditation.

The image features a donkey with a brown coat and a white face, looking directly at the viewer. The donkey's ears are erect, and its eyes are wide open. The background is a solid teal color, providing a contrast to the donkey's brown coat. In the foreground, there is a laptop computer with a silver body and a black screen. The laptop is positioned to the left of the donkey. The image is a digital photograph with a focus on the donkey and the laptop, and there are no visible texts or other discernible objects in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a clear focus on the donkey and the laptop, and the composition is balanced.

This is the fire kasina, it both fascinates and disturbs me. Psychedelic and otherworldly. Just stare at a candle for a few min, then close eyes and look at the afterimage. After a while a bright red glowing dot appears when eyes are closed, which you then take as object, then progresses to visions, sometimes actual entities. Never got past five days so far before having to stop, shit is wild.

Mantra

>In the Pāñcarātra tradition "A mantra is a manifestation of god or one of his aspects, and has two forms, the visual and the linguistic form. Since it is a manifestation of god, or his consort, limbs, attendant, weapon etc. it is also a manifestation of his or her divine power. E. g. the basic mantra (mūlamantra) of the Jayākhyasaṃhitā represents Viṣṇu with his various attributes and as different avatāras of himself. By visualizing or reciting the mantra in specific rituals, the practitioner can control the divine power for both the purpose of liberation (mukti) and to attain worldly pleasures (bhukti), including supernatural powers. The mantras were secret and given by the gurus after initiation, and are only incorporated in the Saṃhitās via codes.

>The ritual of worshipping the mantra starts with the mantranyāsa, in which the sādḥaka ritually applies mantras to different parts of his body, presumably after the ritual bath (snāsa) and the purification of the elements (bhūtaśuddhi). In this way he gets a mantra body, and by being similar to the mantra he is deemed fit to worship it. After this the mantra is worshipped first mentally and then externally with the help of a maṇḍala onto which the mantra is imposed.

>Because of the many repetitions of reciting, visualizing and giving oblations to the mantra made over time by the sādḥaka "the mantra is forced to appear in front of the sādḥaka [...] to admit that it has been mastered by him, and will be at his disposal from this time on". The manner of appearance is different for each mantra, but similar to all of them is that the sādḥaka now has mastered the mantra and is able to use its powers as he pleases, as he has achieved the mantrasiddhi. In Rastelli's words, this means he will "be able to do whatever he desires from this time on".

>Here the moment has come to pass to the main point of our considerations, precisely in relation to the swastika not only as a fire symbol, but also as a polar symbol. From the most diverse testimonies it appears that the solar function embodied by the leaders of the great tradition-rooted cultures was compared to that of a pole. The leader represented the constancy, the immovable point, around which the ordered movement of the forces takes place, which circle him hierarchically graded as rex (rex from regere).

>Here it is about the deeper meaning of the Far Eastern term: "immutability in the middle", to be connected with the words of Confucius: "The one who rules by means of virtue (virtus) (the celestial one, born of immutability in the middle) is like the polar star. He stands firmly on his place, but all the stars revolve around him". Incidentally, the Aristotelian concept of the "immovable mover" is a theological translation of the same conception - to be found again in the designation expressing in Sanskrit the function of the "lord of the world", the cakravartî. Cakravartî means "the one who makes the wheel turn", the wheel of the regnum, in that he appears as the immovable point, the "pole", which forms the center and support for its regulated movement.

>In a deeper sense, however, there is also a relationship here to what might be called Olympic superiority. The "polar" symbol is that of an irresistible force in its serene superiority, of a perfectly controlled power from above, which legitimizes itself, as it were, by its very presence; which brings about the unmediated and threatening experience of something transcendent: an appearance of the permanence of the "world of being" or superworld, which was often itself represented by a fire symbol.

The forehead of the sky, earth's centre, Agni became the messenger of earth and

Vaiśvānara, the Deities produced thee, a God, to be a light unto the Ārya."(1)

"We sacrifice unto Mithra, the lord of wide pastures, .... sleepless, and ever awake. 'For whom the Maker, Ahura Mazda, has built up a dwelling on the Hara Berezaiti, the bright mountain around which the many (stars) revolve, where come neither night nor darkness, no cold wind and no hot wind, no deathful sickness, no uncleanness made by the Daevas, and the clouds cannot reach up unto the Haraiti Bareza.

A dwelling that all the Amesha-Spentas, in one accord with the sun, made for him in the fullness of faith of a devoted heart, and he surveys the whole of the material world from the Haraiti Bareza."(2)

"Perhaps this is why the Swastika, a symbol of "good fortune," is the "wheel of Mithra" (gardâne-ye Mehr). It is the handle he uses to move the heavens. The celestial bears or Arktoi (singular Arktos) are the symbol and instrument of the kosmokrator at the pole. According to classical thought, the fixed stars rotated around the fixed polar axis, beginning with "the shining Bears" (Arktoi or Ursa Major and Ursa Minor). In works such as Aristotle's On the Heavens this stability is taken to be a symbol of the eternal perfection of the Unmoved Mover. Cicero, Manilius, and Aratos all agree."(3)

The image is a screenshot of a Twitter post by Anthony Olivier, who is identified as "@AnthonyOliviera". The post is a humorous commentary on a historical event, specifically the crucifixion of Jesus Christ. The text is in English and is divided into two columns.

graffiti reading "NO NO NO JEW GOD NOW!" and "THAT'S YOU LOL".

The right column is a cartoon drawing of a character with a wolf-like appearance, wearing a red and gold sash with a star on it. The character is holding a cross and is depicted with a figure of Jesus Christ, who is also wearing a robe with the word "Jesus" written on it. The character is also holding a figure of a donkey-headed figure with a cross on it. The text in the right column reads "NO NO NO JEW GOD NOW!" and "THAT'S YOU LOL".

The overall tone of the image is humorous and satirical, with the character's actions and expressions suggesting a playful and exaggerated interpretation of the historical event.

Thought this was interesting, the Barbury Castle crop circle has Vishnu symbology. The cakravati is considered his avatar.

>Each of the four attributes of Vishnu has a symbolic meaning associated with it. The irresistible Sudarshana Chakra is the weapon wielded by Vishnu and it signifies the destruction of one's ego, burning away of spiritual ignorance and illusion, and developing the vision to realize god. From the Conch Shell emanates the primordial sound of creation "AUM", which pervades the entire cosmos. The vibration of AUM is the original sound that contains all other sounds, all words and all languages. It is considered to be the supreme object of meditation and is uttered before all Vedic mantras. The Mace held by Vishnu denotes his power to destroy the materialistic or demonic tendencies within us.

>At the bottom right corner of the formation, we find a six-spoked circle which can be identified as the six-spoked Sudarshana Chakra, the famous discus wielded by Vishnu. At the top of the formation we find a "Circle with a stick attached to" which could very well be the cross-section of the Mace, the other attribute associated with Vishnu. Each of these individual symbols are interconnected by straight lines, thereby forming an extraordinary two-dimensional representation of Vishnu, along with his four attributes.

>Is it possible, therefore, that the crop circles, which are essentially circular in form, and thereby resemble a chakra or a wheel, are heralding the birth of another chakravartin - the savior whose coming is widely anticipated by the people across the world?

The text mentioned is unverified and traces to the Thule Temple website, Pontolillo does quote it though, and it sounds cool.

>The earliest surviving example of the concept of the Black Sun is found among the Sumerians in the 3rd millennium BCE during the reign of Sargon I (23rd-22nd centuries BCE). A text known as the U-Ishtar from this time period speaks of the Black Sun: ...the god Bab-Chomet placed in the new universe The Black Sun, which no one can see with earthly eyes. It is the source of god's power in this world; Around them is all. Thus the world age was determined (Ettl, 1991, Chapter 19.12, p. 59).

>The Black Sun also appears on a stone carving of the grandson of Sargon I, the king Naram-Sin. There, the Midnight Mountain is depicted with a figure wearing a horned helmet and two suns above the mountain. The Sumerian culture was inherited by the Babylonians. The Black Sun is also mentioned in two Babylonian inscriptions:

At the top of the world stands the Midnight Mountain.

Its Light is eternal.

The eyes of man cannot see it — and yet it is there.

Over the Midnight Mountain stream the rays of the Black Sun.

The eyes of man cannot see them — and yet they are there.

Inside us burns its Light.

Only the brave and righteous still have within them the God-head. (The Black Sun Unveiled, Pontolillo 673).

"The hero presents himself face to face with death. He knows he can not cede and that the power of his virile will, his Shaivite first principle, depends on crossing the void without disintegrating.

This is the emptiness that lies beyond the ultimate chakra. A leap into the void through a Black Sun, a Black Hole where the light of the Golden Sun (the one of this material world) dies.

Beyond the Black Sun the hero reaches the Green Thunderbolt. There his nature transmutes into the body of vajra, an immortal red material, hard as diamonds, resurrecting as a divine being.

He is Wotan (Odin) crucified for nine nights on the Tree of Terror, Iggdrasil, (or the Irminsul). The Germanic God is delivered to a shamanic test in which he must pierce through the boundaries of death, arriving in the other world, the world of the Gods from which he recovers the runes, the lost power. From thenceforth he is a true Ehrean, a Lord of the Two Worlds."

In trying to work out a practice, how necessary is avoiding dissolution? (Remember it being mentioned). Seems ego dissolution destroys the animal nature, fine if you want to be a mountain hermit or a monastic, a sage hippy, but what if you want to bring the sword. The kasina path stops at high forth jhana and refines this level, maybe there is a way of strengthening the "mind made body" here, then practice Sufi black light method and cross the void intact.

>Quetzalcoatl/Kukulcan/Viracocha was called Votan in Palenque, which is the same as the Norse Wotan or Odin. Both are described as bearded wisdom bringers and sun worshippers. Were they the same person?

>They were all described as very kind people, very compassionate and empathetic, mad at the sight of suffering, forbidding and abhorring intra-ethnic violence and promoting peace, enlightenment, and cooperative ethnic living (Some kind of proto-natsoc). Ever since the fall of sun worship, people have become less kind, more violent, more ignorant, more selfish, more jewish, more christcuck, more boomer. This cannot be a coincidence.

>The religion of the Hyperboreans and Atlanteans was sun worship. They were all described as extraordinary and excellent people, very peaceful (but justice-driven), very wise (and rational), very harmonious (space, solitude, and nature) and very cooperative and meritocratic. Not like white people today who act in any way except White.

Remember that Emperor Julian was a Pagan Neoplatonist who decided that Helios would be the godhead in his religion, which was intended to challenge judeochristianity. Julian's decision to elevate Helios wasn't arbitrary; it was based on historical accounts in Paganism.

Will add the last section due to a certain sense of inevitability and symmetry, with the first two parts already done. Of course I don't expect anyone to believe it who doesn't have the requisite experiential factor in the otherworldly, and even then likely not in most cases.

Now to the captured diamond Kohinoor, which is a very large diamond with a rather bloody and mythic history, taken from India by the British Empire and kept in the Tower, then placed in the Queen mother's crown. Also Kohinur is a hall in this case, with a party scheduled later, but first I'll have to backtrack, getting ahead of myself.

Mentioned the bad place I got myself into with the astral demon hunting obsession, took almost as long getting out as it did going in, haven't associated with any of these people for a long time and am generally free of vice, never committed any unpardonable sin back then by some miracle, never broke, almost died a lot.

So if you recall the devil hunting mission, which had multiplied to also include the masons and Jewish bankers at this stage, a more normal inclination really, everyone hates those cunts, anyway it was becoming more urgent, like it was all coming to a head. Consider the other (linked) post with the sleeping snake and resulting ability to see glamourised snake holes, and a now strong feeling the demiurge, or source of all evil, was down a snake hole and I was going to find it. Obviously not a logical occurrence, not Sherlocked powers of deduction, intuition.

Caught up and back on track, heading to party, queen of diamonds, Kohinur.

Let's set the stage, back then I was at the peak of my physical ability, mean, a professional fighter. My companions were of course demons, because that's where my energy lay at the time, deep in the pit. First we have the handler, always manipulating in the background. Older, a killer, hitman and torturer now semi retired, lucid in the astral realm via an "angel" who gave him the choice of life or death as a child, when he lay beaten, raped, and dying from his own fathers assault. He described the "angel" as being a black portal at night he went through to the astral realm.

Younger brother of the handler, false light to my apparent darkness, had just got out of jail for pulling out someone's eye, not sure if he'd killed anyone yet, claimed not but looked forward to it. Sometimes named himself Vissago. Charismatic, easy to be around and got along with everyone, liked me because I am a weapon. Add in a Maori bloke, my shit ex, and couple of extras and that's it.

Handler pulls me aside before we go and says to be careful tonight, which was strange because said nothing remotely like that before and dngaf anyway. Mentioned not even he could tell what was down the hole, and it freaked him out, he knew I knew he had a demon in him, we'd discussed it. Asked which hole and he replied hells hole, which is an actual place further down the same road (a waterfall) out in the forest, but not there, confusing I know.

Party, we are drugged up, MDMA and acid, but get there and instantly a feeling like that dance party in the original Blade movie hits, of vampires, we all give each other that look like are you seeing this?

Head back outside to the cars and hang out there, I played chicken with a car, Maori guy pulls this massive floating capoeira styled jump kick, says he feels like light. Dragons come and dance in the sky, all four of us can see them, three of us had seen them before. Black and massive, filling the space between the stars, looking down.

Went down to the building where the party was, around the back to a space on the edge of the forest, listened to the music, smoked weed, drank, dropped a pill that was rumoured to be strong. Time passed, as it does. Sometimes I used to walk off into the forest alone with no light at bush parties.

The moon was out and bright, went into the forest for a bit and came to really long snakey grass, which is an Aussie thing, grass you don't want to walk in because it has a snake in it. Of course there is varying degrees depending on how scared you are of them, to mum any grass is snake grass. Anyway its fuckin snake grass and I get a gate guardian feeling, hear a possible snake noise in the grass and I'm certain there is one in there.

Went straight at it, nothing happened, then a sense of a snake hole and being steered right so I continued left and came out into a clearing. Dead center of this clearing was a large hole, around 10m diameter. Approached with little to no caution, stood and looked down, mind began to bend in comprehension, I knew what it was, holy shit its the devils hole.

So called laws of physics bent here. On flat ground, imagine a 10m circle with a spiral track 1m wide layed out on it, you get four winds and a 1m terminus. This was layed out like that but going down, each wind resting closer into the center than the last, but the spiral never closed.

It was aparently endlessly deep with a clear hole in the middle about 4m across that never changed size. Each level dropped like a 5ft step to the next level, but the hole never closed. Light was dim but I could see down hundreds of meters. It was a physically impossible shape in 3D space.

You may well think at this point well he was juiced to gills and hallucinating, I didn't because I never hallucinate on acid, only once on this weird weed, anyhow did think it so momentous that confimation was needed. Went back and got the ex and handlers brother. Said nothing but dragged them into the forest, they knew something was up.

Got back to the clearing and showed them the hole, asked if they could see it, they could and confirmed the spatial anomaly, also looked pretty freaked out. Then I walked down the snake hole intent on killing him, no thought not to, none. Think I made it half a turn down, to the other side of the thing, before they started frantically yelling at me "nooo ... come back", "wtf are you doing" etc. so I did and that was that.

Decent description of the signs that appear in breathing practice. Aiming to include breath shamatha at around 1/3 of kasina practice time, with the aim of reaching higher levels at similar rate. There is also an air kasina, so the two should hopefully cover the 72 potential defects in this key element.

>In the phases of mindfulness of breathing thus far, you have been attending in various ways to the tactile sensations of the respiration. However, to continue all the way along the path of shamatha, eventually you must shift your attention from the tactile sensations of breathing to an “acquired sign” (Pali: uggaha-nimitta), a symbol of the air element that appears before the mind’s eye as you progress in shamatha practice. To different people, acquired signs associated with the breath practice may appear like a star, a cluster of gems or pearls, a wreath of flowers, a puff of smoke, a cobweb, a cloud, a lotus flower, a wheel, or the moon or sun. The various appearances of the acquired sign are related to the mental dispositions of individual meditators. If you wish to continue on the path of mindfulness of breathing—which here explicitly turns into “mindfulness with breathing”—as soon as such a sign arises, shift your attention to this sign. This will be your object of attention as you proceed along the rest of the nine stages leading to shamatha.

>The Theravada tradition gives this specific description of achieving shamatha by way of mindfulness of the respiration: You begin this practice, as described earlier, by focusing on the tactile sensations of the breath, which are the “sign” for preliminary practice (parikamma-nimitta). Eventually you shift your attention to the acquired sign (uggaha-nimitta) of the breath, which becomes your meditative object until you achieve shamatha, at which point a third sign appears spontaneously. This is called the counterpart sign (patibhaga-nimitta) of the breath, which is a subtle, emblematic representation of the whole quality of the air element.

>Buddhaghosa described this sign as follows: The counterpart sign appears as if breaking out from the acquired sign, and a hundred times a thousand times more purified, like a looking-glass disk drawn from its case, like a mother-of-pearl dish well washed, like the moon’s disk coming out from behind a cloud, like cranes against a thunder cloud. But it has neither color nor shape...it is born only in the perception in one who has obtained concentration, being a mere model of appearance.

1/2 Breath shamatha, 1/2 metta

Continue until metta reaches high 4th jhana, rough duration 1 month.

Stage #2

1/3 Breath shamatha, 2/3 Kasina (supernatural powers edition), auxiliary metta

Continue until breath is stabilized in the second sign, and all eight kasinas are at 4th jhana with all 14 variations listed in "The Path of Purification" achieved. Rough duration 6 - 12 months.

Stage #3

Investigate other realms and past lives for "source code", with partial focus on discovering method to cross the void ego intact.

Duration unknown

Stage #4

Sufi black light practice, hamsa/nada

Duration unknown.

Will test it out and give progress reports, see if I can get measurable and/or observable supernatural results, either works or doesn't, we shall see, quietly confident of reaching votan hippy tier.

Acoustic levitation.

>Abul Hasan Ali Al-Masudi, an Arab historian from the 10th century A.D., wrote about ancient Egypt claiming that a magic papyrus imprinted with symbols was placed under each stone, after which a metal rod was struck against the stone to initiate levitation, with the stone guided along a fenced path with metal poles. Some believe these poles could have been used to create high-frequency sound vibrations responsible for creating the levitation effects.

>In almost every culture where megaliths exist, legends also describe that the huge stones were moved by anti-gravity acoustic means. The Temple of Jupiter at Baalbek, Lebanon has a foundation containing the three largest stone blocks ever used in a man-made structure, each estimated to weigh approximately 800 tons, positioned together with such precision that not even a needle could fit between them.

Space reptonigger frequency control devices?

>According to Morning Sky, Marduk and the SHET-I took one more precaution to isolate the human population and to make sure they received no information or assistance from outside friendly powers. They wanted them to focus only on producing for the sun god and knowing nothing else, as good slaves are expected to do. They constructed a network of high towers all over the planet, "which would transmit a cloud of electronic signals designed to keep the [human workers] in a fog, a docile state. The electronic blanket also served as a cover preventing outside signals from reaching the [human workers]." Upon reflection, this network of towers may have been the obelisks. The granite composition exhibits a certain electronic resonance. These obelisks are now all over the world. The original ancient Egyptian obelisks have been moved to the major cities, and others have been constructed in hundreds of minor locations. And in Washington, D.C., has been erected the largest one in the world, 555 feet high—the Washington Monument—which constitutes a direct connection with ancient Egypt and Babylonia. Is it possible that these obelisks constitute our "electronic blanket"?

Becomes less farfetched when linked to the sound engineering research done at Hypogeum of Hal-Saflieni in Malta and other megalithic sites, but in a negative context. We're looking at an aetheric effect, but sound is that medium that expresses liminality between the two, a dimensional phase shift. Malta is 111hz exactly, Research on the acoustic behavior in megalithic sites in the UK pointed out that they sustained a resonance at a sound frequency between 95 and 120 hertz.

This is the result in MRI scans, clearly shuts down decision making based on gut feelings and past experience.

>MRI scans show that the brain switches off the prefrontal cortex and deactivates the language center that is responsible for holistic processing, creativity, intuition, and inducing a phase at exactly 111 Hz. This reaction results in a divine level of meditation, the trance that some believe allows you to get connected with the universe, God or a creator.

>Fulcanelli in Le Mystere des Cathedrales referred to the Language of the Birds as "the language which teaches the mystery of things and unveils the most hidden truths." Often called the Green language or language of the gods, this sacred form of communication is believed to reveal the most perfect knowledge and secret wisdom to those initiated into its wonder.

>Considering the different names applied to this hidden language may provide hints on how it is learned or re-discovered. The association of the language with the color green gives the impression the language is one which comes with new life or a reconnection. As mentioned, while discussing The Green Cross, the color green has been seen for centuries to signify rebirth. A possible indication a person who understands the mysterious green language may have been spiritually awakened.

>To wonder what voice could accomplish Fulcanelli's description of the Green Language in ability to reveal 'the most hidden truths', may lead some to feel it is none other than the first, green, voice; the Will of God. It's possible that in order to hear it, one must be silent and listen.

Guénon himself wrote (if I'm not mistaken, in The King of the World that there indeed exists a view that the Grail is simultaneously a chalice, a book, and a stone. When Guénon studied the Canterbury megaliths, he said that it is possible that the Grail ought to be understood as a concrete object covered in signs, and that these signs probably represent primordial hieroglyphs.

Wirth argues that Arctida was the cradle of mankind. This is the starting point in Wirth's model. He claims that man originated at the North Pole, i.e., humanity is essentially a polar phenomenon. Hence Nordism as a method, as a vision of the particularities of the primordial language, primordial knowledge, and primordial religion. This is not the North Pole as an abstract concept (such as the mountain Meru), but a real pole where the continent of Arcotgaia lay and on which lived amazing people – the Hyperboreans. Contemplating the surrounding world, they developed the proto-language which lies at the heart of the complex of ideas which we have now, many thousands of years later.

Now about the primordial language. In Wirth's view, the main key to understanding this language, and all existing languages and traditions, is the year. The year and man, the year and God, the year and nature, the year and time, the year and space are, in Wirth's view, synonymous concepts. Man is the embodiment of condensed time. Time in and of itself is a divine manifestation.

The northern, polar cycle is the highest knowledge and, as follows, everything else is to be explained through the calendar. Special attention should be paid to the natural features of the North Pole. We know that a day there lasts not 24 hours, but six months, as does a night. For example, such a notion as the "midnight sun", which is addressed in many of the Dionysian mysteries and is a generally important element in multiple sacred theories, acquires an entirely natural sense in Arctida – natural-magical meaning. This is the sun that shines at midnight at the North Pole during the summer solstice. Indeed, there is sun, and there is midnight. The memory of this midnight sun, like the memory of the primordial homeland of our ancestors, has been preserved in traditional models and been passed down from generation to generation in the form of legends and stories.

>Some of the weirdest of these appertain to water. A typical one is the eerie legend of the Scholomance, or School of the Devil. In the heart of the mountains to the south of Sibiu there is a little lake of an almost inky surface, which is immensely deep. This lake is shunned by every Romanian, for it is here that the dread Scholomance is believed to exist; and here proceed those proud and profane scholars desirous of mastering the hidden secrets of Nature and acquiring supernatural powers. As usual in legends concerning the Devil, he gets the best of the bargain. In this instance he is content with a tithe. The Devil selects ten scholars at a time, and proceeds to initiate them into his awful mysteries, stipulating, however, that when nine of them are released and return to their homes as accredited and qualified sorcerers, he may retain the tenth. This poor slave of the Devil never returns to earth to see the clear sky overhead; instead, the baffled magician mounts on the back of a dragon, who, in fair weather, lies asleep under the deep waters of the lake, where he abides all the time with his infernal master, assisting him to brew the thunder which from time to time reverberates through the mountain passes. One can imagine the captured scholar doing in finitely better work as creator of "effects" behind the scenes at Drury Lane or the Lyceum, or as a performer at Maskelyne and Devant's. A duller task than making thunder in a cold lake all the year round I can scarcely conceive of. The manufacture of Christmas numbers in the summer time would be sheer rapture compared with this tame routine (Hoppé, 1924, p188-189).

One hail-storm, in the middle of a hot summer afternoon, beating down upon the ripened fields may destroy the hopes and labors of a season and with them the food for the following winter is gone as well. When the Romanian appears particularly worried about it, along come the Solomonari. These are men travelling about and claiming to have the knowledge how to drive away hail from any locality by means of their secret incantations. While some of the peasants are beginning to entertain some doubts concerning the ability of these Solomonari to make good their claim they prefer to be on the safe side and the Solomonar, as a rule, has no difficulty to collect his modest fee. It would be unwise, argues the Romanian, to draw the ire of a Solomonar upon one's self over the matter of a little money. The object appears to be a small, round, dark spot with a lighter center, possibly a star or a celestial body. The background is a lighter shade, possibly sky or a cloudy sky, and there is a faint outline of a mountain or hill on the left side of the image. The photograph has a grainy texture, which suggests it may have been taken with a grainy camera or film. There are no texts or discernible markings on the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of early photography, with a focus on capturing the natural world in black and white.

>Trevor James Constable's "Sky Critter Theory" is perhaps one of the strangest theories advanced as an explanation for the UFO phenomenon. Trevor James Constable was one of the proponents of the theory, claiming that UFO's came from a parallel universe known as Etheria and that there were two categories of UFO, some were machines and others living creatures. These invisible creatures he called "Sky Critters" and that they live in the atmosphere. Constable claimed to have captured both types of UFO on film, while working with James Woods during the 1950's and 60's.

>According to Trevor Constable: "The so-called "spacecrafts" are just as "etheric" as the bioforms; as they "are built of matter of the etheric plane..." , and powered by the life-force, what William Reich calls "orgone energy". Their builders are, Constable tells us, a race of intelligent and benign beings, the "etherians", whose world is the same as our world, except it is of a higher vibratory level. The craft become visible and tangible when they materialise into our own world"

>In the Cosmic Pulse, Trevor labeled each frame of these amoeboid-shaped creatures. It's only speculation on my part, but I can't help but believe that these huge living creatures captured on infrared film by Trevor Constable are the same elemental beings that we are referring to as Sylphs at this web site. Remember that the name "Sylph" was coined by the ancient Greeks, who were obviously capable of detecting the presence of these creatures with the ordinary senses.

>According to ZS Livingstone, Sylphs can take on any physical cloud-form appearance they wish or they can remain invisible to the unaided eye. Sylphs exist in the borderlands between the third and fourth dimension, so it doesn't surprise me that they possess some attributes of both dimensions -invisibility yes, but they also have a heat-producing body that will show up on infrared film.

Than all the golden greenness of the hills,
And in its shadows glorious far beyond
The purple dropping skirts of thunder-cloud,
A city of all colours and fair shapes,
And gleams of falling water day and night . . .
Lit up with rainbow fountains in the day,
Lit up with rain of coloured stars by night . .
And out beyond and sleeping in the light
The islands and the azure of the sea,
And upwards, through a labyrinth of spires
And turrets, and steep alabaster walls,
The city rises—all its jewelled fronts
Shining to seaward . . .
Until at last through miles of shadowy air
The blue and violet mountains shut the sky."

"People when they see clouds in air say it is air (vapour) and a sign of rain, but there is more in them than they suppose. For there is in the sky another world made by wizards and witches who, when they died, were not admitted to heaven, and so they made a world for themselves, which has a sea (lake) in it. And when the weather is dark, and clouds fly before the storm, those clouds are boats full of hail, and in them are wizards and witches, who throw the hail at one another, and so it falls to earth and does great harm. When this happens one should invoke the spirit of thunder (Tituno or Tignia)."

"Domdaniel is a fictional cavernous hall situated beneath the roof of the sea, depicted as a seminary and meeting place for evil magicians, sorcerers, and malevolent supernatural beings in European literary adaptations of Arabian tales and Romantic literature. The concept originates from continuations of the Arabian Nightstales, specifically in the 1788–1793 "Arabian Tales" by Dom Chavis and M. Cazotte, where it serves as a hidden academy for practitioners of dark arts, but it gained prominence through its central role in Robert Southey's 1801 epic poem Thalaba the Destroyer, a metrical romance inspired by Orientalist themes. In Southey's narrative, the Domdaniel is the stronghold of a cabal of sorcerers who orchestrate the destruction of the hero Thalaba's family to thwart a prophecy foretelling their downfall; Thalaba ultimately infiltrates the cavern, destroys the orb of Eblis (the Islamic equivalent of Satan), causing the entire structure to collapse and destroying the magicians, before being translated into Paradise, fulfilling his destiny."

The image depicts a fantastical, cave-like setting with a variety of structures and elements. At the center, there is a large, dome-shaped structure with a pointed top, surrounded by smaller domes and towers. The dome is illuminated by a vibrant, multicolored light that casts a glow on the surrounding structures.

To the left, there is a large, tree-like structure with a pointed top, resembling a tree or a giant fern. The structure is adorned with a multitude of small, colorful lights that add to its mystical ambiance.

On the right, there is a smaller, dome-shaped structure with a pointed top, which appears to be a smaller version of the central dome. This structure is surrounded by a lush, green environment with trees and plants, suggesting a lush, natural setting.

In the foreground, there is a train or vehicle with a rounded front, moving along a track that curves around the central dome. The train's motion is suggested by the slight blur and the way the light reflects off its surface.

The background is filled with a starry sky, with stars and nebulae visible, adding to the otherworldly atmosphere of the scene. The overall color palette is dominated by shades of purple, blue, and green, with the central dome and the train in white, creating a contrast that draws the eye.

The image is a digital illustration, and the style is reminiscent of fantasy or science fiction, with a focus on the surreal and otherworldly elements. There are no texts present in the image.

Lash talks about Melchizedek being critical to archonic forces, maybe higher up than the tribal desert donkey, does seem somewhat anomalous.

>11Q13(11QMelch) is a fragment of a text, dated to the end of the second or start of the first century BC, about Melchizedek, found in Cave 11 at Qumran in the West Bank and part of the Dead Sea Scrolls. Melchizedek is seen as a divine being in the text and is referred to as "El" or "Elohim", titles usually reserved for God

>In the Hebrew Bible, Melchizedek was the king of Salem and priest of El Elyon (often translated as 'God Most High'). He is first mentioned in Genesis 14:18–20, where he brings out bread and wine and blesses Abram (Abraham), subsequent to Abram's victory in the Battle of the Vale of Siddim.

<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Melchizedek>

Then there is the 36 Tzadikim Nistarim who seem to be Melchizedek's possessed secret agents, maybe hybrids or something.

>The Lamed-Vav Tzaddikim are also called the Nistarim ("concealed ones"). In our folk tales, they emerge from their self-imposed concealment and, by the mystic powers, which they possess, they succeed in averting the threatened disasters of a people persecuted by the enemies that surround them. They return to their anonymity as soon as their task is accomplished, 'concealing' themselves once again in a Jewish community wherein they are relatively unknown

>As later becomes clear (although never entirely so) between the lines of the biblical narrative, the priest of Zadok does not belong to the hereditary priesthoods of Benjamin, Aaron, and Levi. In fact the priesthood of Zadok the most enigmatic, overlooked factor in Judeo-Christian tradition. It literally comes out of nowhere. This priesthood must have originated before Abraham because its chief representative was the mysterious figure who recruited the first patriarch and conferred on the community of Israel its identity as a "chosen people" Tradition assumes that Yahweh chose the Hebrews but the actual agent of commission was not the father god. It was Melchizedek, head of the priesthood of Zadok.

Plutarch, Democritus, and Tacitus vs some fuckwit with nothing

"Historian. He wrote Tactics in 2 books, [and]On the Jews; in which [latter] he says that they bowed down to the golden head of an ass and every seven years hunted a stranger and attacked him and tore his flesh into thin strips and thus killed him."
(Damocritus, Suda, Delta #49)

>But I should think that if the Jews had such an antipathy against a hog, they would kill it as the magicians do mice; when, on the contrary, they are by their religion as much prohibited to kill as to eat it. And perhaps there may be some reason given for this; for as the ass is worshipped by them as the first discoverer of fountains. (Plutarch, Quæstiones Conviviales 4.5.2)

>Those who say that Typhon fled from the battle on an ass for seven days, and having been saved produced sons, Hierosolymus and Judeaus, are at this point clearly dragging Jewish issues into the story." (Plutarch, De Iside et Osiride 363C-D)

>Nothing, however, distressed them so much as the scarcity of water, and they had sunk ready to perish in all directions over the plain, when a herd of wild asses was seen to retire from their pasture to a rock shaded by trees. Moyses followed them, and, guided by the appearance of a grassy spot, discovered an abundant spring of water. This furnished relief. After a continuous journey for six days, on the seventh they possessed themselves of a country, from which they expelled the inhabitants, and in which they founded a city and a temple. [...] In their holy place they have consecrated an image of the animal by whose guidance they found deliverance from their long and thirsty wanderings." (Tacitus, Histories V:3-4)

Through the mind, which, after all, is their mind, the predators inject into the lives of human beings whatever is convenient for them. And they ensure, in this manner, a degree of security to act as a buffer against their fear."

They reasoned that man must have been a complete being at one point, with stupendous insights, feats of awareness that are mythological legends nowadays. And then, everything seems to disappear, and we have now a sedated man. What I'm saying is that what we have against us is not a simple predator. It is very smart, and organized. It follows a methodical system to render us useless. Man, the magical being that he is destined to be, is no longer magical. He's an average piece of meat." The dragon is depicted in a dynamic pose, with its wings spread wide and its head turned to the side, as if it is flying. Below the dragon, there is a quote in a serif font that reads, "It simply isn't an adventure worth telling if there aren't any dragons." The quote is in a larger font size than the dragon, emphasizing its importance.

The background of the image features a dark, cloudy sky with a hint of a mountain range in the distance. The sky is filled with dark clouds, suggesting a moody atmosphere. The mountain range is depicted in a muted color palette, with shades of gray and brown.

At the bottom of the image, there is a small, stylized text that reads "J.R.R. Tolkien." This text is in a smaller font size compared to the quote and is placed at the bottom of the image, indicating a reference to the author of the quote.

The overall style of the image is reminiscent of fantasy literature, with the dragon and the quote suggesting a connection to the works of J.R.R. Tolkien, the author of the quote. The use of a fantasy theme is supported by the dragon's design and the mountainous landscape, which are common elements in the works of J.R.R. Tolkien.

Back to magical vowels, this is a summary of Nag Hammadi: The Discourse on the Ogdoad and Ennead.

>Here we find a striking altered state of consciousness induced by a strange magical incantation of vowels. When the priests of Egypt sang their hymns to praise their gods they uttered the seven Greek vowels in the prescribed order, the sound of these seven vowels was so beautiful that people preferred this music to the flute or lyre. The seven vowels correspond to the seven notes of the octave, which are related to the seven planets. The esoteric songbook of the Hermetic community in Alexandria plays a central role at the moments of awakening described in the Hermetica.

>Hermes reminds Tat, of the progress he has made thanks to the books, which although belong to a lower stage in the progress towards gnosis, are nevertheless necessary. But they do not suffice, because discursive language simply “does not get as far as the truth.”

>Hermes and Tat, along with several brethren, all of which have been reborn, enter a deep meditative state. Hermes begins by calling attention to God’s supreme divine attributes, including the fact that he is named only in silence. The prayer contains a string of mysterious words and vowels that represent God’s “secret name”. A single voice sings the tone, which is answered by the choir, until all vowels are sung. The chanting gets more and more intense, and with every vowel the consciousness of the pupil rises up through the planetary spheres until he is at the top in the highest level, and goes beyond the cosmos, experiencing the Eighth, and the Ninth, and finally, the One, where he sees a fountain bubbling with life.

The image is a surrealistic painting that depicts a scene of intense religious or spiritual symbolism. At the center, there is a figure with a radiant, glowing aura, which suggests a divine or divine-like presence. This figure is surrounded by a multitude of smaller figures, some of which appear to be skeletons, and others that resemble angels or other celestial beings. The background is filled with a dense, dark cloud-like atmosphere, which could symbolize the underworld or the spiritual realm.

The painting is rendered in a style that is reminiscent of the Art Nouveau movement, characterized by its use of flowing lines and a sense of movement. The color palette is dominated by warm, earthy tones, with golden and brown hues that give the scene a mystical and otherworldly feel. The overall composition and the use of light and shadow create a sense of depth and dimension, enhancing the surrealistic quality of the image.

>The pupil experiences a moment of fear, and Hermes tells him to bring his focus back to the hymn. The final stage of the ascent must be mastered by the pupil alone, verbal instruction is useless. Hermes's words, who have guided the pupil, are no longer of any use. The pupil expresses himself by means of silent hymns that are heard and understood only by an interior faculty of perception. In fact, the most fundamental statement of the pupil is that what he is seeing cannot be put into words.

>The initiation has been completed. The pupil has now found peace, and wants to thank God for having granted him the supreme vision he had been asking for. A distinction is implied between the silent hymn of contemplation that was sung during the ecstatic state of the Eighth and Ninth, and verbal hymns that may be addressed to God afterwards, as signs of gratitude.

>Hermes instructs his son to write everything down in hieroglyphs and place them in his sanctuary at the right astrological moment, and protect the book with an apotropaic formula, designed to avert evil. So that future generations will be able to read it. Presumably, then, it is the very text that we have been analysing.

Last link is particularly detailed.

The image is a collage of three separate photographs, each depicting different ancient artifacts. The top left photo shows a carved figure with a red background and a white outline, resembling a stylized human head. The top right photo features a stone carving with a triangular shape and a circular design, resembling a stylized face or a symbol. The bottom left photo shows a stone carving with a stylized human head, also with a red background and a white outline. The bottom right photo shows a stone carving with a stylized human head, also with a triangular shape and a circular design, resembling a stylized face or a symbol.

The text in the image is in English and provides information about the artifacts. It mentions that the artifacts are from the ancient Mesoamerican civilization, specifically from the Mayan civilization, and are part of the collection of the Museo del Sol in Mexico City. The text also includes a logo with the text "Museo del Sol" and a symbol that resembles a sun or a pyramid, indicating the museum's name and the type of collection it represents. The text is presented in a simple, straightforward style, without any additional graphics or embellishments.

Noticed the Ka pose in the picture, didn't post source because its jewish, but its kept me occupied this morn so might as well. Will have a look for the gnostic original text. Figure these vowel "keycodes" are somehow related to traversing the duat in the afterlife and finding the exit.

>The ancient Egyptians believed that the *ka* would embark on a journey to the afterlife after death. This journey was fraught with challenges and dangers, and the *ka* needed to successfully navigate these trials to reach the afterlife. The *ka* would be judged by Osiris, the god of the underworld, and would be required to prove its worthiness to enter the afterlife.

>The *ka* had to overcome a series of tests and trials, and the successful completion of these challenges would determine its fate in the afterlife. The *ka* would be judged based on its actions in life, and it would need to demonstrate that it had lived a virtuous and ethical life. If the *ka* was found worthy, it would be granted eternal life in the afterlife.

The image shows a bronze statue of a figure standing upright. The figure appears to be a humanoid with a raised arm, raised hand, and a raised foot. The statue has a simple, stylized design with a rounded head and a pointed hat-like top. The figure's body is elongated, and the legs are straight, with the feet positioned apart. The background is a solid, neutral color, providing a contrast that highlights the statue. The style of the image is a close-up photograph, focusing on the details of the statue. >The Marcosian perspective interprets these aeons as **symbolically mirrored within the human body**, creating a profound microcosmic correspondence.

>Marcus found in Scripture and in Nature repeated examples of the occurrence of his mystical numbers four six eight ten twelve thirty. If so great mysteries were contained in names it naturally followed that to know the right name of each celestial power was a matter of vital importance; and such knowledge the heretical teachers promised to bestow.

>This knowledge included the possession of formulae by the use of which the initiated would after death become incomprehensible and invisible to principalities and powers and leaving their bodies in this lower creation and their souls with the Demiurge ascend in their spirits to the Pleroma. Probably the Egyptian religion contributed this element to Gnosticism. Some of these Marcosian formulae were in Hebrew of which Irenaeus has preserved specimens much corrupted by copyists.

Aspects of Aeon Sophia manifest as green nature goddess, truth holder, teacher of mysteries. Hard to recognise in these days of deception and decent into matter, but always here regardless, as basis of all creation.

>At the dawn of the Christian era, the ages-old healing contact with the earth was broken, the telluric voices ceased to speak to the Pagan people. As recounted in Plutarch's essay "On Why the Oracles Came to Fail," a voice in the wilderness cried out, "The Great God Pan is dead." The lament for the death of Pan can be situated in a temporal frame. Around 150 C.E. the connotation of the Latin word paganus changed, due to the mounting assault on Pagan values by converts to the salvationist creed. Tertullian, one of the first Christian ideologues to openly attack Gnostics, argued that pagani be regarded as "civilian" noncombatants in the open war on non-Christians. Converts to the new religion called themselves "enrolled members of Christ (members of his militant church)," and viewed non-Christians "as not of the army so enrolled." It was inevitable that these "civilians" would be in harm's way in the escalating war against whatever challenged the emergent belief system. Pagans all over Europa rapidly became collateral damage in the Christian campaign against heresy.

The big horned thing is probably Ashteroth like you mentioned, actual moloch has a calf head. The "moloch" owl at Bohemian Grove also has, groves being synonymous with the name. Directly related to the fattening of the Greek for sacrifice in the grove, which seems particularly cruel, except when compared to the Carthaginian practice of raising slaves for the slaughter, and rumoured modern subterranean equivalent. Tyre comes up a lot in these things.

Obi-Wan:

>Mos Eisley spaceport. You will never find a more wretched hive of scum and villainy. We must be cautious.

>Astarte, great goddess of the ancient Middle East and chief deity of Tyre, Sidon, and Elat, important Mediterranean seaports. Hebrew scholars now feel that the goddess Ashtoreth mentioned so often in the Bible is a deliberate conflation of the Greek name Astarte and the Hebrew word boshet, "shame," indicating the Hebrews' contempt for her cult.

King Solomon, married to foreign wives, "followed Astarte the goddess of the Sidonians" (1 Kings 11:5)

"Isa 57:5 who burn with lust among the oaks, under every luxuriant tree, who slaughter your children in the valleys, under the clefts of the rocks?"

With this agrees the ancient name, Ashteroth-Karnaim (or, "the horned Ashteroth") of a city in Bashan (Genesis 14:5; Deuteronomy 1:4; Joshua 13:12).

'Ashtoreth, whom the Phnicians called

Astart, queen of heaven, with crescent horns

To whose bright image, nightly by the moon

Sidonian virgins paid their vows and songs.'

Exodus 34:13 "But ye shall destroy their altars, break their images, and cut down their groves."

The Hebrew word for "groves" here is the word "asherah" defined by Strong's:

>Ashera(h)=groves(for idol worship) 1) a Babylonian (Astarte)-Canaanite goddess (of fortune and happiness), the supposed consort of Baal, her images 1a) the goddess, goddessess 1b) sacred trees or poles set up near an altar

"it was in order to the fulfilling a law of the Jews, which they must not tell him, that he was thus fed; and that they did the same at a set time every year: that they used to catch a Greek foreigner, and fast him thus up every year, and then lead him to a certain wood, and kill him, and sacrifice with their accustomed solemnities, and taste of his entrails, and take an oath upon this sacrificing a Greek, that they would ever be at enmity with the Greeks; and that then they threw the remaining parts of the miserable wretch into a certain pit."

(Apion, as quoted by Flavius Josephus, Against Apion, book 2, ch8)

"Behind one tree in the midst.—The noun "tree" is a conjectural explanation. The Hebrew text gives the "one" in the masculine, and is explained as referring either (1) to the Hierophant, who led the worshippers; or (2), as with a contemptuous reluctance to utter the name of the false deity, to Thammuz. The Hebrew margin gives "one" in the feminine, and this may have been meant for the Asherah, the "grove," or Phallic symbol of idolatrous worship. If we adopt the masculine, and refer it to Thammuz, the word may connect itself with the lamentations of the Syrian maidens over Thammuz (Adonis) as over an only son. (Comp. Milton, Paradise Lost, i.)"

Shekhina glory seems to refer to the plagiarized idea of the donkey demon controlling the clouds for transport, but also a cultist nod to the smoke of sacrifice.

Note David's mention of "[H]is clouds." Numbers 10:34 refers to "the cloud of the LORD."

The clouds God rides (compare Psalm 68:4) are unique for at least two awe-inspiring reasons.

"And the LORD went before them by day in a pillar of cloud to lead the way, and by night in a pillar of fire to give them light, so as to go by day and night. He did not take away the pillar of cloud by day or the pillar of fire by night from before the people."

"Shekhina ('the dwelling or the presence of God') is a concept in Kabbalism (mystic tradition of Judaism, Talmud), freemasonry and gnosticism, branches of the Saturn cult, the worship of Saturn (the God/Allah/YHVH program). It is associated with Temple of Solomon symbolism. Fire (shin: fire) sacrifice and incense is used to evoke Lucifer (distortion of the Divine Feminine). In Revelation 9 the Abyss is opened with smoke billowing out."

> In Hollywood films the Shekhinah is embodied by the film noir archetype of cigarette smoking Femme Fatale (Lilith archetype, Faye Dunaway in Chinatown, Sean Young in Blade Runner, Mia Wallace in Pulp Fiction, Rose McGowan in the Doom Generation, Pam Grier in Jackie Brown).

> Shekhinah symbolism in: Alice in Wonderland (smoking caterpillar), Roman Polanski's Rosemary's Baby (green smoke of Rosemary's Devil's Pepper), Chinatown, The Two Jakes, Mulholland Falls, Apocalypse Now (purple smoke)

> I recently stumbled upon an article that confirmed that a large statue of Moloch had been placed at the entry to the Colosseum in Rome, best known as the site of Christians sacrificed to wild animals and gladiators for entertainment and as an admonition that Christianity was an enemy of Rome – to be shown no mercy. What is particularly curious about this story, is that the statue was put there with the apparent blessing of the Vatican.

> The article states the following by way of explanation;

"Previously, the Catholic Church had made the Colosseum a sacred site to honor these first Christians martyred for their faith, even placing Stations of the Cross there for the faithful to contemplate their sacrifice. Now it's guarded by the pagan god Molech, whose demand for child sacrifice has been compared to the modern epidemic of abortion, and the faithful are greeted with a statue honoring a pagan deity whose murderous spirit still seeks to kill children.” (CBN News).

>Once in a while, there is a story that has the power to capture the Spirit of the Age or Zeitgeist. We are living in particularly Saturnine times and with the upcoming Grand Conjunction of Saturn and Jupiter in Saturn’s domicile, the already ominous signs beg further analysis. Moloch is Saturn by another name. As the god of money, he emphasizes the materialism of Saturn. More grotesquely, he is known as the god who demanded child sacrifices, consumed by a furnace in his belly.

>Textual evidence from ancient Mesopotamia identifies Kronos as the Phoenician Baal Hammon, and the earlier Mesopotamian deities Kumarbi (Hurrians), El (Canaan), Dagan (Amorites and Philistines), Assur (Assyria), and Enlil (Akkad and Sumer). All of them, from Kumarbi to Enlil, have their origins in northwest Syria or southeast Turkey, in an area generally bounded on the south by Jebel Bishri in northeast Syria and the Amanus mountains in southern Turkey. And that's precisely the region that eventually produced the Amorites and the tribe from which the Amorite kings of Babylon claimed descent, the Tidanu/Ditanu, which apparently took the name of the old gods called "Titans" by the later Greeks.

Very similar tale to Kumarbi/Saturn founding the black stone cult, but with added serpents.

>In Egypt was a serpent named Thermuthis, which was looked upon as very sacred; and the natives are said to have made use of it as a royal tiara, with which they ornamented the statues of Isis. We learn from Diodorus Siculus that the kings of Egypt wore high bonnets, which terminated in a round ball, and the whole was surrounded by figures of asps. The priests, likewise, upon their bonnets had the representation of serpents. The ancients had a notion that when Saturn devoured his own children, his wife Ops deceived him by substituting a large stone in lieu of one of his sons, which stone was called Abadir. But Ops and Opis, represented here as a feminine, was the serpent deity, and Abadir is the same personage under a different denomination. Abadir seems to be a variation of Ob-Adur, and signifies the serpent god Orus. One of these stones, which Saturn was supposed to have swallowed instead of a child, stood, according to Pausanias, at Delphi. It was esteemed very sacred, and used to have libations of wine poured upon it daily; and upon festivals was otherwise honoured. The purport of the above was probably this: it was for a long time a custom to offer children at the altar of Saturn; but in process of time they removed it, and in its room erected a stone pillar, before which they made their vows, and offered sacrifices of another nature.

>This stone which they thus substituted was called Ab-Adar, from the deity represented by it. The term Ab generally signifies a father, but in this instance it certainly relates to a serpent, which was indifferently styled Ab, Aub, and Ob. Some regard Abaddon, or, as it is mentioned in the Book of the Revelation, Abaddon, to have been the name of the same Ophite god, with whose worship the world had been so long infected. He is termed Abaddon, the angel of the bottomless pit - the prince of darkness. In another place he is described as the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil, and Satan. Hence the learned Heinsius is supposed to be right in the opinion which he has given upon this passage, when he makes Abaddon the same as the serpent Pytho.

There was likewise a tradition that it had once swarmed with serpents. (Bochart says the island is said to have been named Rhodus from Rhad, a Syriac word for a serpent). The like notion prevailed almost in every place where they settled. They came under the more general titles of Leleges and Pelasgi; but more particularly of Eloprians, Europians, Oropians, Asopians, Inopians, Ophionians, and Aethiopes, as appears from the names which they bequeathed; and in most places where they resided there were handed down traditions which alluded to their original title of Ophites. In Phrygia, and upon the Hellespont, whither they sent out colonies very early, was a people styled the Ophiogeneis, or the serpent breed, who were said to retain an affinity and correspondence with serpents; and a notion prevailed that some hero, who had conducted them, was changed from a serpent to a man. In Colchis was a river Ophis, and there was another of the same name in Arcadia. It was so named from a body of people who settled upon its banks, and were said to have been conducted by a serpent.

>Thucydides mentions a people of Aetolia, called Ophionians; and the temple of Apollo at Petara, in Lycia, seems to have had its first institution from a priestess of the same name. The island of Cyprus was called Ophiusa, and Ophiodes, from the serpents with which it was supposed to have abounded. Of what species they were is nowhere mentioned, excepting only that about Paphos there was said to have been a kind of serpent with two legs. By this is meant the Ophite race, who came from Egypt, and from Syria, and got footing in this island. They settled also in Crete, where they increased greatly in numbers; so that Minos was said by an unseemly allegory, opheis ouresai, serpentes, minxisse. The island Seriphus was one vast rock, by the Romans called saxum seriphium, and made use of as a large kind of prison for banished persons. It is represented as having once abounded with serpents, and it is styled by Virgil, serpentifera, as the passage is corrected by Scaliger.

>It is said by the Greeks that Medusa's head was brought by Perseus; by this is meant the serpent Deity, whose worship was here introduced by people called Peresians. Medusa's head denoted divine wisdom, and the island was sacred to the serpent, as is apparent from its name.

There exists an absolute Foundation, unknowable in its own nature, which the doctrine names E (Essence). From this, there is no direct contact, for it infinitely transcends all form and all thought. However, by the inexorable law of participation, from it emanate the  $\epsilon$  (Energies), vital and luminous flows that constitute the very substance of all that exists. These energies are the vehicle through which the Absolute makes itself present, in an attenuated and relative mode, within the domain of manifestation.

The world is not, therefore, a product of chance or of a chaotic will. Prior to all concreteness, there exist the A (Archetypal Forms), primordial and universal models that structure all possible identity. Each archetype possesses an A-core (Archetypal Core), an essential and invariant signature, like a divine seal impressed upon the very idea of the thing. Every concrete entity, every x (Entity) found in the world, is the progeny of at least one of these archetypes. This means that, in its most intimate root, each being participates in a universal form, preserving within itself, in an indestructible manner, this sacred core.

The process by which the archetype is projected into concrete existence is mediated by an ontological mapping, an F (Functor of Participation), which translates the universal into the particular. It is here, at this critical point of transition between the plane of pure ideas (C_archetypes) and the plane of manifested entities (W_world), that the agent of the fall intervenes.

The doctrine teaches that the current state of the world does not reflect the original purity of emanation. Between the archetype and its progeny, a  $\delta$  (Tensor of Distortion) has been inserted, commonly called the Demiurge. This  $\delta$  is not a substantial being, but a parasitic operator. Its function is not to create (for only E is the source) but to deform. It acts upon the process  $A > x$ , introducing noise, fragmentation, and obscurity. It is like a noisy filter on a divine communication channel, or a lossy data compression, the general image of the archetype arrives, but blurred, with artifacts and imperfections.

Crucially, the axiom declares that  $\delta$ , however much it distorts, cannot destroy the A-core. The archetypal core remains intact, like an identity hash invariant under all corruption. Thus, the evil introduced by the demiurge is never absolute or creative, it is always relative, secondary, a mere deformation of that which already is. The Demiurge is a counterfeiter who possesses no gold of its own, only knowing how to paint inferior metal yellow.

The state of each concrete entity is measured by its  $\chi$  (Coefficient of Energetic Integration). This coefficient represents the degree of coherence, alignment, and synthesis of the energies ( $\epsilon$ ) that constitute it. As long as  $\chi$  remains low, the entity lives in a state of dispersed, fragmented, and dormant proto-experience. There exists, however, a  $\theta$  (Threshold of Consciousness), a critical value of integration. When, by appropriate means,  $\chi \geq \theta$ , unified consciousness arises in the entity (the capacity for reflection, self-recognition, and ultimately, recognition of its own archetypal origin).

Here the core of the spiritual path in this doctrine is revealed, as salvation is technical (gnosis). It is not a mere gratuitous pardon, but a rigorous process of reintegration. The path consists precisely in increasing  $\chi$ , purifying the distortions of  $\delta$  and realigning concrete existence with its own proper A-core. This is achieved through ascetic practice, through the intellectual knowledge of archetypal invariants, and through conscious participation in the divine energies ( $\epsilon$ ). As  $\chi$  grows, the influence of the demiurgic tensor diminishes, for the entity reconnects with the source of its own form.

Thus, for the beginner, understanding this structure is the first step toward liberation. The world is seen as an ontological battlefield, where the divine essence, in the form of indestructible archetypal cores, struggles to express itself through the veil of distortions of  $\delta$ . Human consciousness is not an accident, but a sign that the threshold  $\theta$  can be reached. The doctrine, therefore, proclaims an energetic pan-animism (everything participates in the life of  $\epsilon$ ), a non-ontological evil ( $\delta$  is an operator, not a foundation), and a technical soteriology (reintegration through the increase of  $\chi$ ).

Nice, brilliant really, concise with little room for the demiurge to slip in distortion, and interesting with the archetypes. Has me thinking of breaking things down beyond anthropomorphic archonic energy siphoning forms (the gods). Then the gap between concept and archetype core measured by but not the full definition of  $\chi$  (Coefficient of Energetic Integration), and its relation to semantics and "source code" language. Also I guess everyone would want to know what their archetype was, which could relate to what they find important rather than what they think they are. Anyway the whole thing has a pure feeling.

>There exists, however, a  $\theta$  (Threshold of Consciousness), a critical value of integration. When, by appropriate means,  $\chi \geq \theta$ , unified consciousness arises in the entity (the capacity for reflection, self-recognition, and ultimately, recognition of its own archetypal origin).

>So, it is not too far-fetched to see the Cuthites come to Cutha, city of the Underworld. It is also possible they migrated to Opis on the Tigris, as well. Cuthites are said by Jennings to have settled at Rhodes. One of Rhodes' colonies was Rhoda (Rosas) on the Northeast coast of Spain. Rhoda is an early connection to Rheda, just northwest of there, in France. And Rheda and the Rhedones ("Fern People") pertains to Rennes-le-Chateau!

>The migration of priests to Euboea probably took place early in the Tanite Dynasty (early 11th Century B C E). Of course, it is possible, too, that this took place earlier, after Aknaten died in the middle of the 14th Century B C E. 11th Century B C E would be not long after the war of the Benjaminites took place, and some of the Tribe moved on, to, among other places, Arcadia.

>And, remember, what Jennings wrote, that not only was there a city named Eve in Arcadia, but:

"In Colchis was a river Ophis, and there was another of the same name in Arcadia. It was so named from a body of people who settled upon its banks, and were said to have been conducted by a serpent."

>About fifty years before the building of the Temple of Solomon in Jerusalem, a colony of Grecians, chiefly Ionians, complaining of the narrow limits of their country, in an increased population, emigrated; and having been settled in Asia Minor, gave to that country the name of Ionia.

>No doubt that people carried with them their manners, sciences, and religion; and themysteries of Eleusisamong the rest. Accordingly we find that one of their cities, Byblos, was famed for the worship of Apollo, as Apollonia had been with their ancestors.

>These Ionians, participating in the improved state of civilization in which their mother country, Greece, then was, cultivated the sciences, and useful arts; but made themselves most conspicuous in architecture, and invented or improved the order called by their own name Ionian.

>These Ionians formed a society, whose purpose was to employ themselves in erecting buildings. The general assembly of the society, was first held at Theos; but afterwards, in consequence of some civil commotions, passed to Lebedos.

>This sect or society was now called the Dionysian Artificers, as Bacchus was supposed to be the inventor of building theatres; and they performed the Dionysian festivities. They afterwards extended themselves to Syria, Persia, and India.

>From this period, the Science of Astronomy which had given rise to the symbols of the Dionysian rites, became connected with types taken from the art of building.

Gibil is god of the black stone, interesting that these cuthites/serpent priests were originally called negral/gibil.

>All gods of the pantheon of the Arab city Emesa, in Syria, had Semitic names, with one exception: the supreme god Elagabal, who represented the sun. His unusual name suggests an earlier origin and suggests this god was a local deity, related to similar pre-Arabian gods from Canaan. The Aramaic form of name of Elagabal is Ilaha Gabal, meaning "God of the mountain"

>Mountain gods had been known in Anatolia, Syria, and Palestine since Hittite times, and they continued to be venerated up until the Roman age. They were often portrayed with eagles. At a later stage, the worshippers of Elagabal were influenced by the cult of the Babylonian sun god Šamaš. Elagabal has also been compared to the Chaldaean god Gibil, which can be translated as "god of the black stone". Gebal is a Semitic root which means "to create"

>"The true origin of the divine name elah-Gabal was revealed on the day Mr. Friedrich Delitzsch established that the name of the god Fire of the ancient pre-Semitic people of the Schoumers and Akkads, subsequently adopted by the Chaldeo-Babylonian religion of the Semitic period, that this name, although written bil-gi by virtue of a law of reversal of the order of characters in the orthograph of which we have a good number of examples, read Gibil, a word which in the Acadian language is well known as meaning "to burn", as a verb, and "fire", as a noun. The god Gibil of Chaldea is surely the god Gabal of Emesa, and this is not the only example we have of a non-Semitic and Acadian divine denomination, passing among purely Semitic peoples through the influence of Babylon. Everything comes together to prove the identity of the two characters." (SOL ELAGABALUS, François Lenormant, published in Revue de l'histoire des religions, Vol. 3 (1881), pp. 310-322)

DaCosta ends his essay with the statement that after the Dionysian Artificers made it to Israel to work on the Temple, some of their rites were introduced, in a modified form, to be compatible with the Monotheism... Yet we would say that the Artificers simply attached themselves to the most learned of those who weren't propagandists of theYahwehcultus, and then DaCosta states that eventually this group of Initiates became known in Maccabean times as Hasidim. These mystics were responsible for the formation of the Essene communities, Da Costa says. Undoubtedly this is true, as it is also true that some influence came from Buddhist missionaries, who came west to Alexandria. Also, King Attalus I of Pergamon granted land to these people, but eventually they were exiled.

Robert I. Clegg, in Mackey's Revised History of Freemasonry, Volume I (1921), gives us some information as to this commission:

"Later history of the association of Dionysian Architects forms no part of the Legend just cited. But we may here to advantage trace their progress. About seven hundred years after the building of the Temple at Jerusalem, they are said to have been incorporated by the King of Pergamum, an ancient province of Mysia, as a society exclusively engaged in the erection of public buildings such as theaters and temples. They settled at Teos, an Ionian city on the coast of Asia Minor, where notwithstanding its troubles they remained for several centuries. Among the works by them were a magnificent theater and a splendid temple of Dionysus, ruins of which still remain.

The image is a digital graphic with a dark blue background that features a cartoon depiction of a cat wearing a space helmet and goggles, sitting inside a spaceship with a dotted pattern. The spaceship is floating in space with a bright blue star in the background. The cat appears to be looking out of the spaceship's window, which is a circular window with a dotted pattern. Above the cat, there is a text in white font that reads "THE ABRAHAMIC RELIGIONS ARE A PLAGUE UPON THE EARTH." Below the cat, there is a smaller text in white font that says "flipp." The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, with a playful and exaggerated depiction of religious beliefs.

"Becoming unruly they were at length expelled from Teos and departed to Ephesus. King Attalus sent them from that city to Myonessus. The Teians sending representatives to Rome requesting that the Myonessians should not be permitted to fortify their city, the Dionysiaks removed to Lebedos, about fifteen miles from Teos, where they were welcomed.

"In the 5th Century of the Christian Era, the Emperor Theodosius forbid all mystical associations byt the Dionysiacs are said to have continued their existenceuntil the time of the Crusades. Bump. I'd posit that the black stone and the god of the black stone are not Saturn.

<https://goddesses-and-gods.blogspot.com/2008/08/saturn-swallowing-stone-substituted-for.html?m=1>

>At last Rhea [...] substituted for him a rock enveloped in swaddling clothes—which Saturn, ignorant of the deception practiced upon him, immediately swallowed. [...] The stone swallowed by Saturn in lieu of his youngest son was placed by Jupiter at Delphi, where it was held in great veneration and was daily anointed.

<https://www.ancient-origins.net/artifacts-other-artifacts/sacred-omphalos-stone-navel-world-and-communicator-gods-002655>

>A later legend states that the god Apollo slayed the great serpent Python so that he could establish his oracular temple at Delphi, and that the omphalos marked the exact spot where he slayed Python. This myth may sometimes be found on ancient coins which depict an omphalos stone with a serpent wound around it.

The omphalos entwined with serpent would become the Orphic egg of Phanes/Jupiter. The Essenes are said to originate from the teachings of a "Righteous Teacher" but that word for teacher (Zadok) was also a proper noun for the planet Jupiter. The early Artificers received admittance to Pergamun because it was still a notorious refuge for Hellenic pagans. I'd also guess these cultists did not flee overcrowding but fled the growing disdain for their public rites (we know polite Hellenic society began to view its more carnal traditions as primitive) to Asia Minor where the eastern worship of Jupiter (like with Jupiter-Sabazios) retained more focus on his role as ecstatic fertility rain-maker than the hygienic Greeks or orderly Latins were comfortable with.

inscriptions on the sculpture. The style of the image is a straightforward, non-stylized photograph, focusing on the object without any additional context or embellishments.

Pergamon, where Artificers went, was Troy in Anatolia. Guess this was the last bastion of the old nature cults, and the transfer of the black stone to Rome a final fall. The orgiastic rites were more the exoteric manifestation, with the esoteric making that seem tame, at least with regards to the Drakaina or "dragoness" priestesses of the initiatory mysteries, their pharmakon, and the rites of hieros gamos, which was basically the old spiritual technology.

>Whether the Phrygians of Apostolic times actually saw all these sublime ideas underlying the religion of their country may be doubted; but it is fairly certain that at the time in question there was worshipped throughout Anatolia a divine family comprising a goddess known as the Mother of the Gods, together with a male deity, who was at once her son, her spouse, her brother, and sometimes her father. The worship of this pair, who were in the last resort considered as one bisexual being, was celebrated in the form of festivals and mystery-plays like those of the Middle Ages, in which the birth, nuptials, death, and resurrection of the divinities were acted in dramatic form. At these festivals, the worshippers gave themselves up to religious excitement alternating between continence sometimes carried to the extent of self-mutilation on the part of the men, and hysterical or religious prostitution on the part of the women.

The gathering of foreign merchants and slaves in the Anatolian cities, and the constant shifting of their inhabitants by their successive masters, had forced on the votaries of these Phrygian deities a theocrasia of the most complete kind, and the Phrygian god and goddess were in turn identified with the deities of Eleusis, of whom indeed they may have been the prototypes, with the Syrian Aphrodite and Adonis, with the Egypto-Greek Serapis and Isis, and probably with many Oriental deities as well. At the same time, their fame and their worship had spread far beyond Phrygia. The primitive statue of the goddess of Pessinus, a black stone or baetyl dignified by the name of the Mother of the Gods, was transported to Rome in the stress of the Second Punic War and there became the centre of a ritual served by eunuch priests supported by the State; while, later, her analogue, the Syrian goddess, whose temple at Hierapolis, according to Lucian, required a personnel of over three hundred ministrants, became the object of the special devotion of the Emperor Nero. As with the Alexandrian divinities, the respect paid to these stranger deities by the legions carried their worship into every part of the Roman world.

Guy goes mask off for a moment and gives a glimpse of just how weird these "people" are, not that we didn't know.

>The Hive must be maintained at all costs, and anything that threatens to break up the hive must be regarded with suspicion, as Evil. Not all Catholics are Roman Catholics, it is true, but not all people care to prop up Roman Catholics, and should not be condemned for regarding them as bearing the lion's share of culpability in an Ideological War that has been in progress since the Pauline and Petrine churches began, by people who are trapped in their own semantic prisons. Hastings'Encyclopaedia of Religion and Ethics, s.v., Ophitism, tells us:

>"It is impossible to ignore the strong affinities between the Ophite doctrines and those of the pagan sects which are known to us through the Hermetic literature. These sects were probably pre-Christian, and were certainly anterior to the emergence of historical Gnosticism. ... In spite of occasional details which suggest the influence of the great Gnostic schools, we have scarcely a trace in Ophitism of their more characteristic developments - e.g., the aeonology, the fall of Sophia. If the Ophite myths had arisen from a re-combination of the larger systems, these features would almost certainly have found a prominent place.

>We have less to do today with ensuring good herds or crops, but the rites exist and they ensure what is important to us for our existence. Perhaps the fact that our food supply is what it is, should be telling us something about the laxity in practice that exists today. Today we don't need a dying savior because we have grown up, or some of us at least, and have saved ourselves. And that is exactly what the Law of Thelema sets out to do.

Obviously the Asherah poles had serpents draped on them, serpent and tree.

>In the biblical Books of Kings, the Nehushtan is the bronze image of a serpent on a pole. The image is described in the Book of Numbers, where Yahweh instructed Moses to erect it so that the Israelites who saw it would be cured and be protected from dying from the bites of the "fiery serpents", which Yahweh had sent to punish them for speaking against him and Moses. According to 2 Kings 18:4, King Hezekiah instituted an iconoclastic reform: Kings 18:4 He removed the high places, and broke the images, and cut down the Asherah poles, and broke in pieces the brazen serpent that Moses had made; for until those days the children of Israel had been offering sacrifices to it; and it was called Nehushtan [a bronze sculpture]" Historical findings have also shown that the utilization of bronze serpents was not unique. In several Canaanite cities there were discoveries of the cultic use of these objects. It may have represented traces of an older practice associated with medicine and healing, that was also not restricted to the Levant

The association missing from these articles on pharmakon is human sacrifice. These rites are cast in taboo sexual terms without noting hellish torture, murder, and gratuitous bloodshed, which are dealt with in separate articles, but they were not.

"Incritical theory, pharmakon is a concept introduced by Jacques Derrida. It is derived from the Greek source term φάρμακον (phármakon), a word that can mean either remedy or poison. The term is closely related to pharmakos, which means ritual of human sacrifice"

>The origins of ancient Mediterranean pharmacy and the role of snake-derived venoms in pre-Hippocratic medicine are poorly understood. An analysis of ancient Greek and Latin written sources within the context of the native technical vocabularies employed by ancient priestesses and physicians reveals the existence and practice of a sophisticated polyvalent pharmacy in which human health was maintained and modified by the administration of viperid venoms and "antidotes" developed in the bodies of priestesses and initiates. Medico-religious practices, involving the use of venoms and their antidotes are traceable to a single late Bronze Age priestess, a Colchian named Medea, whose pharmaceutical experimentation with venoms, toxic botanicals, fungi, and antidotes informed both pagan and Christian mystery religions and established the Western religious concept of communion.

Medea came from the Echidnaic Priesthood, the priestesses were called Drakaina.

"And in a hollow cave she bore another monster, irresistible, in no wise like either to mortal men or to the undying gods, even the goddess fierce Echidna who is half a nymph with glancing eyes and fair cheeks, and half again a huge snake, great and awful, with speckled skin, eating raw flesh beneath the secret parts of the holy earth. And there she has a cave deep down under a hollow rock far from the deathless gods and mortal men.

There, then, did the gods appoint her a glorious house to dwell in: and she keeps guard in Arima beneath the earth, grim Echidna, a nymph who dies not nor grows old all her days."

>THE DRAKAINA SKYTHIA (Scythian Dracaena) was the first ruler of the land of Skythia. She was a woman from the waist up with the tail of a serpent in place of legs. When Herakles was travelling through her realm with the cattle of Geryon, she stole some of the herd and insisted the hero mate with her before she would return them. He did so and through her became the ancestor of a line of Skythian kings.

>The Skythian Drakaina may have identified with the monster Ekhidna who was sometimes placed in the Skythian land of Arimoi. The Drakaina's story is undoubtedly a Greek translation of an old Skythian myth. Her serpentine form, the birthing of the first men, and the title "Hora" (Season) all suggest she was an indigenous earth-goddess.

When pharaoh crossed the duat seeking immortality there was 7, 12, or 21 gates and their guardians that needed to be passed, these were generally lesser gods with freaky names that needed to be memorised, along with secret directions. As a method the marcosian mentioned earlier seems more promising, becoming invisible to all archonic minions and bypassing their tests and judgements.

>TheBook of Gatesdescribes 12 gates, each named after a goddess and serving as architectural and divine barriers. Chapter 144 of theBook of the Deadmentions seven gates, each with a god, a doorkeeper, and a herald. For instance, the seventh gate is protected by the god "Sharpest of Them All," the doorkeeper "Strident of Voice," and the herald "Rejector of Rebels."

>Other texts describe 21 portals within the "Mansion of Osiris in the Field of Reeds," each guarded by zoomorphic deities wielding menacing knives. These gates bore evocative names like "Mistress of Anger – Dancing on Blood" or gentler ones like "Mistress of the Altar." The guardians also had fearsome names, such as "Swallower of Sinners" and "Existing on Maggots," emphasizing their role as enforcers of divine justice.

The interconnection between the physical and spiritual worlds mentioned is interesting, that what you understand here translates. A lot of what the Egyptians did seems to be installing a subconscious framework that maps onto the duat, a story you tell yourself, and the path appears.

>Entry required the soul to recite the secret name of the guardian deity, akin to providing a password. This symbolic exchange reflected the importance of knowledge and the power of language in navigating the afterlife.

>The gate deities and their guardians symbolize the challenges faced by the soul in the afterlife and the triumph of knowledge, morality, and divine favor. The gates represent both physical and spiritual barriers, ensuring that only the righteous and knowledgeable could pass. The guardians, with their terrifying appearances and powerful names, underscore the dangers and trials of the journey.

>The detailed descriptions of these gates and their guardians also reflect the Egyptians' belief in the interconnection between the physical and spiritual worlds. By equipping the deceased with the knowledge of these deities' names and functions, the funerary texts served as guides, ensuring a safe passage and ultimate union with the divine.

Thinking I'll still call archetypes in the old manner when needed or risk being cut off from them, then analyse in search of archetypical core and dissolve the form and whatever associated weirdness (δ) similar to later phase Tibetan deity practice. Tend to take things literally and just put solar and lunar in no good demiurge basket (with some attributes still inadvertently attached), not what was meant I know. But yeah purify distortions of  $\delta$  to increase  $\chi$  and find archetypal core, rather than throw out baby with bathwater.

>Matter comes from the Latin mater, which means mother. Pattern comes from the Latin patronus, which comes from pater, which means father. From these two archetypal ideas, we can deduce the association of masculinity with order, reason, logic, and form, while the feminine is associated with the cyclical forces of nature, change, temporality, and matter. Matter is divided and in constant flux, yet it mysteriously continues to interact with immutable, universal mathematical ideals. Pattern, order, and form are an integral part of beauty and will always impress and inform matter. Similarly, the chaotic destruction of matter will ultimately always submit to the power of order.

>There is no Sophia, BTW. There are no female aeons; the beauty and grace of "women" in our world come from aspects of the divine Nous that are literally grace and beauty, and they externalize this because they are lunar. >Films are littered with piper themes. The Child catcher in Chitty Chitty Bang Bang is an interesting piper type figure. When he tempts the children into his wheeled cage, the symbolism is literally screaming out at you. There are sunflowers, symbolising Leo , purple diamond shapes, alternating light and dark and more purple and white striped canvas. Purple is the colour of royalty which derives originally from the power of the menses 'blood of purple hue'. Diamonds are the jewel of Taurus. There is a joker/court jester on the side of the cage between two pillars and when the child catcher sets off with his haul, the pillars which cover two corners of the vehicle collapse and the whole external cover of the vehicle comes off so just the bars of the cage are now visible with the children inside. This seems like collapse of the temple into manifestation. Revelation begun again.

>King Amenophis desired to see the gods and was advised to cleanse the land of lepers.

>Around 80,000 people were sent to work in quarries and were later permitted to inhabit the deserted city of Avaris.

>They chose as their leader a priest from Heliopolis named Osarsiph, who established laws contrary to Egyptian customs, forbidding the worship of the gods and ordering the killing of sacred animals.

>Osarsiph allied with the expelled Hyksos (who were in Jerusalem) to invade Egypt, forcing King Amenophis to flee to Ethiopia for 13 years.

>Osarsiph changed his name to Moses upon assuming leadership of this people. Eventually, Amenophis and his son Sethos returned and expelled the group to the borders of Syria.

There is two main lines of reasoning that associate early Jews (Suteans, Shasu) with Set (Sutih). The first being the appellation "Sons of Seth" and yhwh's origin in the Mt. Seir region of Edom where we also find "the Pillars of Seth".

This has been covered in previous threads and I'll write it up again in more detail in another.

>The Cain line did not survive, and the Seth line, ultimately, produced the Jewish people.

<https://blogs.timesofisrael.com/two-lines-of-lineage/>

The second line towards identification of yhwh with the donkey god Set/Typhon comes from the account of Manetho, an early third century BC Egyptian scribe who compiled an account of the Hyksos from Egyptian sources before the advent of the Pentateuch. Most of the ancient scholars whose writings survive agree on this as origin of the bulk of the Jews in early Jerusalem (Babylonian exiles recorded as only 65000). Even so there was various other Canaanite tribes contributing to the formation of Israel, along with various gods, the Hyksos worship of Set confirms the syncretism with Baal, rather than negates it.

The statue is made of a dark material, possibly bronze or a similar metal, and has intricate carvings and patterns on its surface. The throne-like structure is made of stone and has a decorative border with geometric designs. The background features a stone wall with columns and a similar decorative border. The lighting in the image is soft, casting shadows on the statue and the surrounding stonework. There are no visible texts or inscriptions on the statue. The style of the image is a close-up photograph with a focus on the statue, capturing the details of the sculpture and its surroundings.

Modern scholars generally agree with the Hyksos as Jew origin, although there is some debate, mostly from Jews and cucks who take offense at the reversal of Exodus ie. they were driven out and didn't escape (every single time), also the donkey story makes them look like idiots because donkeys, and adds another demon to the already highly cthonic generation of yhwh.

Both the time span and the general area match the Exodus account, there is no other recorded historical occurrence that matches whatsoever.

The image depicts a fantastical scene with a central focus on a towering structure that resembles a tower or fortress. The structure is dark, with a pointed top and a spire-like structure that reaches towards the sky. The top of the structure is adorned with a glowing, fiery eye, which is a prominent feature of the image. The eye is a bright orange color, and it appears to be glowing with a radiant light, suggesting a supernatural or magical quality.

The tower is set against a backdrop of a stormy, dark sky with dark clouds, which adds to the dramatic atmosphere of the scene. Below the tower, the landscape is rugged and rugged, with rugged mountains and valleys visible. The colors in the image are predominantly dark, with the dark tower and the stormy sky, but there are also hints of orange and yellow from the glowing eye, which stands out against the darker tones.

There are no texts or discernible human figures in the image, and the style of the image is reminiscent of fantasy or science fiction, with a focus on the fantastical elements of the scene. The composition of the image places the tower as the central point of interest, with the stormy sky and rugged landscape serving to enhance its imposing presence.

Hence the tales of jews worshipping the donkey Set/Typhon/yhwh, written by the most credentialed historians of antiquity.

"Historian. He wrote Tactics in 2 books, [and]On the Jews; in which [latter] he says that they bowed down to the golden head of an ass and every seven years hunted a stranger and attacked him and tore his flesh into thin strips and thus killed him." (Damocritus, Suda, Delta #49)

>But I should think that if the Jews had such an antipathy against a hog, they would kill it as the magicians do mice; when, on the contrary, they are by their religion as much prohibited to kill as to eat it. And perhaps there may be some reason given for this; for as the ass is worshipped by them as the first discoverer of fountains. (Plutarch, Quæstiones Conviviales 4.5.2)

>Those who say that Typhon fled from the battle on an ass for seven days, and having been saved produced sons, Hierosolymus and Judeaus, are at this point clearly dragging Jewish issues into the story." (Plutarch, De Iside et Osiride 363C-D)

>Nothing, however, distressed them so much as the scarcity of water, and they had sunk ready to perish in all directions over the plain, when a herd of wild asses was seen to retire from their pasture to a rock shaded by trees. Moyses followed them, and, guided by the appearance of a grassy spot, discovered an abundant spring of water. This furnished relief. After a continuous journey for six days, on the seventh they possessed themselves of a country, from which they expelled the inhabitants, and in which they founded a city and a temple. [...] In their holy place they have consecrated an image of the animal by whose guidance they found deliverance from their long and thirsty wanderings." (Tacitus, Histories V:3-4)

of the Egyptians

So he gathered all the food of these seven years which occurred in the land of Egypt and placed the food in the cities; he placed in every city the food from its own surrounding fields. GEN 41:48

Now there was no food in all the land, because the famine was very severe, so that the land of Egypt and the land of Canaan languished because of the famine. GEN 47:13

Joseph gathered all the money that was found in the land of Egypt and in the land of Canaan for the grain which they bought, and Joseph brought the money into Pharaoh's house. GEN 47:14

When the money was all spent in the land of Egypt and in the land of Canaan, all the Egyptians came to Joseph and said, "Give us food, for why should we die in your presence? For our money is gone." GEN 47:15

Then Joseph said, "Give up your livestock, and I will give you food for your livestock, since your money is gone." GEN 47:16

So Joseph bought all the land of Egypt for Pharaoh, for every Egyptian sold his field, because the famine was severe upon them. Thus the land became Pharaoh's. GEN 47:20

The image is a digital illustration that depicts a scene from the biblical story of the Donkey and the Innkeeper. In the center of the image, a donkey is seated on a wooden bench, wearing a blue robe with a yellow collar. The donkey's head is turned to the left, and it appears to be looking at a man who is kneeling in front of it. The man is dressed in a blue robe and a white headscarf, and he is bending over, seemingly in a gesture of reverence or prayer.

To the left of the donkey, there is a wooden door with a doorknob and a small lantern hanging from the ceiling. The door and lantern are part of a stone-walled room with a stone floor. The walls are adorned with decorative stonework, and there is a small window on the right side of the image. The overall color palette of the image is warm, with shades of brown and beige dominating the scene. The style of the illustration is realistic with a focus on the interaction between the characters and the architectural elements of the room.

Others claim Jacob was the Pharaoh.

>Jacob/Yakub-Har: Biblical Jacob and the Hyksos pharaoh Yakub-Har are the same historical figure, supported by precise chronological alignment (both associated with a 17-year period), identical linguistic roots (Y-Q-B), and the anomalous royal treatment Jacob receives in the biblical narrative.

>Joseph/Khyan: Joseph served under the Hyksos pharaoh Khyan (whose name connects to the Hebrew "Cohen"), establishing the economic and administrative systems that his father Jacob/Yakub-Har would later inherit.

>Moses/Thutmose: Moses emerged during Egypt's "-mose" naming period, approximately 100-150 years after Jacob/Yakub-Har, with his name preserving the Egyptian royal naming element while removing the theophoric component.

Genesis 50:2-3 - Then Joseph directed the physicians in his service to embalm his father Israel. So the physicians embalmed him, taking a full forty days, for that was the time required for embalming. And the Egyptians mourned for him seventy days.

But by far the funniest shit is leper Moses.

A controversial fragment associates the origin of the Israelites with a group of "unclean" or leprous Egyptians.

>King Amenophis desired to see the gods and was advised to cleanse the land of lepers.

>Around 80,000 people were sent to work in quarries and were later permitted to inhabit the deserted city of Avaris.

>They chose as their leader a priest from Heliopolis named Osarsiph, who established laws contrary to Egyptian customs, forbidding the worship of the gods and ordering the killing of sacred animals.

>Osarsiph allied with the expelled Hyksos (who were in Jerusalem) to invade Egypt, forcing King Amenophis to flee to Ethiopia for 13 years.

>Osarsiph changed his name to Moses upon assuming leadership of this people. Eventually, Amenophis and his son Sethos returned and expelled the group to the borders of Syria.

There is a surprising correspondence in the "good" book, and several other sources.

Exodus 4:6 - Then the LORD said, "Put your hand inside your cloak." So Moses put his hand into his cloak, and when he took it out, the skin was leprous—it had become as white as snow.

Numbers 12:10 - When the cloud lifted from above the tent, Miriam's skin was leprous—it became as white as snow. Aaron turned toward her and saw that she had a defiling skin disease, >Moses, according to Manetho, was an Egyptian priest named Osarsiph who tried to take over Egypt. The pharaoh had quarantined everyone with leprosy into a city called Avaris, and Osarsiph used them to stage a revolt. He made himself the ruler of the lepers, changed his name to Moses, and turned them against the pharaoh.

>The Egyptians told the story of Moses, too, but in their version, he wasn't a miracle-working hero with god-given powers. In the version passed down by the Egyptian historian Manetho, Moses is a brutal and violent monster

"But the Egyptians, being troubled with scabies and leprosy, and moved by some oracular prediction, expelled him, with those who had the disease, out of Egypt, that the distemper might not spread among a greater number.

Becoming leader, accordingly, of the exiles, he carried off by stealth the sacred utensils of the Egyptians, who, endeavouring to recover them by force of arms, were obliged by tempests to return home"

At the bottom of the illustration, there is a floral design with a central flower and green leaves. The overall style of the image suggests it may be a decorative piece, possibly from a traditional East Asian context, given the intricate patterns and the use of color. The image is not clear enough to discern any specific text or additional details.

"There exists an absolute Foundation, unknowable in its own nature, which the doctrine names E (Essence). From this, there is no direct contact, for it infinitely transcends all form and all thought. However, by the inexorable law of participation, from it emanate the ε (Energies), vital and luminous flows that constitute the very substance of all that exists. These energies are the vehicle through which the Absolute makes itself present, in an attenuated and relative mode, within the domain of manifestation."

"The world is not, therefore, a product of chance or of a chaotic will. Prior to all concreteness, there exist the A (Archetypal Forms), primordial and universal models that structure all possible identity. Each archetype possesses an A-core (Archetypal Core), an essential and invariant signature, like a divine seal impressed upon the very idea of the thing. Every concrete entity, every x (Entity) found in the world, is the progeny of at least one of these archetypes. This means that, in its most intimate root, each being participates in a universal form, preserving within itself, in an indestructible manner, this sacred core."

"The process by which the archetype is projected into concrete existence is mediated by an ontological mapping, an F (Functor of Participation), which translates the universal into the particular. It is here, at this critical point of transition between the plane of pure ideas (C_archetypes) and the plane of manifested entities (W_world), that the agent of the fall intervenes."

"The doctrine teaches that the current state of the world does not reflect the original purity of emanation. Between the archetype and its progeny, a  $\delta$  (Tensor of Distortion) has been inserted, commonly called the Demiurge. This  $\delta$  is not a substantial being, but a parasitic operator. Its function is not to create (for only E is the source) but to deform. It acts upon the process  $A > x$ , introducing noise, fragmentation, and obscurity. It is like a noisy filter on a divine communication channel, or a lossy data compression, the general image of the archetype arrives, but blurred, with artifacts and imperfections."

"Crucially, the axiom declares that  $\delta$ , however much it distorts, cannot destroy the A-core. The archetypal core remains intact, like an identity hash invariant under all corruption. Thus, the evil introduced by the demiurge is never absolute or creative, it is always relative, secondary, a mere deformation of that which already is. The Demiurge is a counterfeiter who possesses no gold of its own, only knowing how to paint inferior metal yellow."

"The state of each concrete entity is measured by its  $\chi$  (Coefficient of Energetic Integration). This coefficient represents the degree of coherence, alignment, and synthesis of the energies ( $\epsilon$ ) that constitute it. As long as  $\chi$  remains low, the entity lives in a state of dispersed, fragmented, and dormant proto-experience. There exists, however, a  $\theta$  (Threshold of Consciousness), a critical value of integration. When, by appropriate means,  $\chi \geq \theta$ , unified consciousness arises in the entity (the capacity for reflection, self-recognition, and ultimately, recognition of its own archetypal origin)."

"Here the core of the spiritual path in this doctrine is revealed, as salvation is technical (gnosis). It is not a mere gratuitous pardon, but a rigorous process of reintegration. The path consists precisely in increasing  $\chi$ , purifying the distortions of  $\delta$  and realigning concrete existence with its own proper A-core. This is achieved through ascetic practice, through the intellectual knowledge of archetypal invariants, and through conscious participation in the divine energies ( $\epsilon$ ). As  $\chi$  grows, the influence of the demiurgic tensor diminishes, for the entity reconnects with the source of its own form."

"Thus, for the beginner, understanding this structure is the first step toward liberation. The world is seen as an ontological battlefield, where the divine essence, in the form of indestructible archetypal cores, struggles to express itself through the veil of distortions of  $\delta$ . Human consciousness is not an accident, but a sign that the threshold  $\theta$  can be reached. The doctrine, therefore, proclaims an energetic pan-animism (everything participates in the life of  $\epsilon$ ), a non-ontological evil ( $\delta$  is an operator, not a foundation), and a technical soteriology (reintegration through the increase of  $\chi$ )."

>In the most primordial symbolism, the Moon signifies the passive receptivity of manifestation, the luminous reflection of the principlial Light. The feminine, thus identified with the lunar, represents the mirror through which the Divine Intellect projects the multiplicity of forms. Hence the figure of the Triple Goddess expressing the ternary rhythm of becoming: generation, fullness, and dissolution.

"Among the Arabs, as among the Greeks, this triad appears as Al-Lat, Al-Uzza, and Manat, counterparts of Selene, Artemis, and Hecate three modalities of the same potency."

>This enclosure is the domain of the Demiurge, or Seth-Yaldabaoth, the "god of this world," who mistakes reflection for reality. The Moon–Saturn polarity is his veil: the cycle of birth and death sustained by time and illusion. Yet the same Saturn who binds also guards the Gate of release. When the intellect awakens and turns its gaze from reflection to source, the lunar illusion becomes transparency, and the saturnian ring opens into eternity. Thus the world, once prison, becomes passage; the Moon regains her light, and Chronos is transfigured into the timeless Logos.

>The symbolism of Azazel, identified in Semitic traditions as the scapegoat and lord of the seirim, the goat-like spirits of the desert, points to an archetype of cosmic disintegration and separation from the principle. In his ambivalent function, he represents the point of the fall of the primordial light into matter, that is, the moment when the creative power, moving away from the center, becomes an inverted reflection, a "mirror of light" imprisoned in the density of manifestation. Mount Seir, the domain of Edom, symbolizes this limit of Creation, the desert where the Spirit is exiled and where the "fallen angel" is bound until the end of the cycle. The figure of Dushara, or Dusares, the black god of the Nabateans, associated with the cubic stone of Petra, is none other than the continuation of this cult to the Saturnine principle, the "Lord of the Limit" (Shara, of Mesopotamian origin), who imprisons the celestial power in a mineral and inert form. The black cube, a symbol of Saturn, is the emblem of coagulated time, of the terminal state of manifestation: within it, the spirit is solidified, the light becomes opaque, and space replaces the center. The rite of libation upon the stone thus represents the residual attempt to reconnect with the lost axis, the blood sacrifice seeking to reanimate what has been petrified.

>But beneath the veil of this degeneration, the "shadow of the sacred" still hides: the androgynous principle evoked by the Zohar, where masculine and feminine unite in the "serpent rider," Azazel. As in all cyclic theogonies, the dethroned god, the devouring Saturn, is not merely the symbol of evil, but the guardian of the portal leading back to the Unmanifest. The crossing of the desert, the confrontation with the black cube, is, therefore, the ultimate rite of reintegration: returning to the center through the dissolution of form, when the "goat of exile" becomes the "lamb of return."

The Donkey God is the Ultimate Threshold Guardian.

ABRAHYLICS!

The Cult of the Law:

>the divine law (Torah, Sharia) is not a path to liberation but the "Ring of Saturn" codified. It is the set of rules that governs the prison, the karma (Moirai) that binds souls to the wheel of samsara within the Saturn-Moon enclosure.

The Inversion of the Sacrificial Principle:

>Sacrifice in the Abrahylc system is not about transcending the material. It is a libation to the Black Cube, an attempt to appease or reanimate the very principle that has petrified spirit into matter. It keeps the system running rather than dismantling it. .

"It promotes a materialist, technocratic, and "impious" spirit. It is focused on earthly dominion, mastery over nature (as a resource, not a sacred manifestation), and the building of "Jerusalem" as a material kingdom, a civilization that is a monument to the Demiurge, much like the forges of the Idaean Dactyls."

"In essence, to be "Abrahyllic" is to be an adherent of the Religion of the Demiurge. It is to mistake the creator and warden of the distorted material cosmos for the ultimate Principle of all reality. It is to worship the power that forged the rings of Saturn, that binds spirit into the black cube of matter, and that will one day, as Surtr, burn it all down, not as a holy purification, but as the terminal point of a cosmic cycle from which the only hope of escape is the return of the slain god."

"The primordial breath is the first emanation of Being, the vehicle through which the One expresses itself in the manifold. In all superior traditions, from the Sufi Nafas ar-Rahmān to the Hellenic pneuma and the Hebrew ruah, the breath is the animating principle that transmits life to forms, the vibration that makes the cosmos breathe. This breath, which in primordial states flowed uninterrupted between the divine Intellect and the manifested world, became progressively fragmented as the intermediary hierarchies, the secondary Logoi, daimones, angels, and archons, assumed an autonomous role in the chain of manifestation. Air, in this sense, is not the physical element, but the symbol of the subtle substance that links spirit to matter, the universal mediator that makes communication between the high and the low possible. The ancients spoke of seventy-two "winds", equivalent to the zodiacal archons or decans, sidereal powers that regulated the flow of the cosmic soul through the twelve signs. Each wind corresponded to a specific divine "puff," a mode of vibration of the Logos's energy in the world. After the "fall" or twisting of the emanation, that is, when the intermediary functors began to operate as autonomous centers, forgetting their unitive origin, these winds became dispersed and inverted. What was once the harmonious respiration of the anima mundi became a cacophony of disconnected astral currents: from this arise demonic influences, djinn, prethas, dybbukim, and all forms of possession and psychic imbalance."

"On the metaphysical plane, this twisting of the breath is identical to the emergence of matter, the "reflection" of spirit that believes itself to be substance. The lunar, feminine, receptive and reflective principle becomes the vehicle of densification; the mirror turns upon itself and tries to shine without the sun. The "black cube," a symbol of the state of spiritual coagulation, represents this imprisonment of the breath within form, where the circular movement of cosmic respiration converts into inorganic stagnation. The "fall" is nothing but the collapse of the universal breath: the instant when the rhythm of divine life ceases to be recognized within beings. On the path of reintegration, every initiatory way, be it the Ario-Atlantean gnosis, the Palamite doctrine of energeia, or the Sufi dhikr, seeks to restore the rhythm of the breath. To return to the respiration of the Nafas ar-Rahmān is to reopen the channel between the center and the periphery, to reconcile the dispersed wind with the Spirit that emitted it. Thus, to understand air as a symbol is to understand the mode by which Being makes itself present: the pneuma, the ruah, the prana, all are faces of the same vital principle, which, when rediscovered and centralized, dissolves the illusory duality and reestablishes the perfect circulation of light in the cosmos."

The Zār of Northeast Africa, the Djinn of Islam, the Dybbukim of the Kabbalah, and even the riding spirits of Voodoo and the East represent, under diverse names, a single ontological category: pneumatic beings, residues or reflections of ancient cosmic powers. In origin, these powers belonged to the order of the air daimones, the "wind spirits" of the Semites and proto-Africans, which translate the vital breath (ruach, pneuma, ka, ashe) as the vehicle of consciousness. When mankind distanced itself from the spiritual center, these intermediaries, once messengers and guardians of the spheres, became unstable and fallen, acting in a possessive manner, like wandering fragments of the universal soul.

>The Jewish Dybbuk is a soul deviated from the cycle of Gilgul, incapable of reintegrating itself; the Zār is a foreign wind that penetrates the body and disturbs its harmony; the Djinn, an aerial fire between the angelic and the demonic; and the exorcist or Baal Shem, heir to the primordial theurgy, seeks to restore the spirit to its place in the order. In all cases, it is a matter of an imbalance of subtle influences, a loss of correspondence between the human microcosm and the celestial macrocosm. These forces can be seen as degenerate echoes of the ancient "zodiacal spirits," the intelligences that governed the twelve signs and their seventy-two subdivisions, the "archons of the circle," which later occultist symbolism reinterpreted as the 72 genii or wind demons. Thus, modern accounts of possession, exorcism, and reincarnation would be nothing but residual manifestations of a sacred science that saw in the cosmos a hierarchy of breaths, and in man the mirror where these winds converge. The image is a black and white illustration that depicts a celestial scene. At the center, there is a large, circular pattern with a central, glowing, star-like figure surrounded by smaller, radiating lines. This central figure is surrounded by a multitude of smaller, radiating lines radiating outward from it, creating a sense of a cosmic web or network. Surrounding the central figure are various celestial bodies and figures, including what appear to be stars, planets, and clouds. The clouds are depicted in a detailed manner, with some appearing to be solid and others appearing to be wispy or translucent. The stars and planets are rendered in a way that suggests they are in motion, as if they are orbiting the central figure.

At the top of the image, there is a decorative border with a floral design and text. The text is in a script that is not entirely clear, but it appears to be a title or description of the scene. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of early 17th-century engravings, with its detailed and intricate design.

Tibetan Bon Tsa-Lung practice (tsa/channel, lung/wind), they consider it highly effective for opening subtle energy channels, interesting neck mobility and stretches with breath holds, different chakra and elemental winds focus, and an almost emdr or EFT release of negative emotions/obscurations, doesn't take long and is easy. Seems old, from the Six Yogas of Naropa, but traces back to the Bon Mother Tantra, the Tibetans have partially preserved what must have been one of the most advanced Aryan esoteric currents. Mostly degenerate these days, but there is an active householder tradition that denounces the priests.

>According to tantras, in the 72.000 channels flow 72.000 subtle winds, which impose 72.000 emotions. If these channels are soft, gentle and in the correct way or straight, the wind circulation moves freely and gives creativity and clarity to the mind. If the circulation is blocked or disturbed, 72.000 negative emotions or related emotions may be produced. Commonly, in animals and human beings, these channels are not fully clear and clean, consequently the body ages, suffers, and death exists because of these disturbed energies in the channels. In fact, this is the identity and image of samsara. Whoever is able to recognize and see this wrong flow of energy in the channels can work on it through the yoga and tsa-rLung practices. That is why these practices focus so much on the wind. Tantras even say: "The one who knows the channels and their functions, knows the nature of the body. And the one who knows the functions of the wind, knows the functions of the mind."

Each of these 72 levels of manifestation or winds also correspond to speech, the higher forms able to control the elements themselves, or call/cast out the negative nodes as demons.

>The process of sounding forth apparently occurs on four levels, which correspond to the four levels of speech (vak): para, the supreme level; pasyanti, the first "vision" of what is to come; madhyama, the intermediate state; and vaikhari, the fully embodied stage of everyday speech. In this way, language, like reality, runs the full gamut from the level of supreme nonmanifestation...down to the fragmented, divided, and conventional level of everyday expression. By inviting us to see and identify only small portions and artificially isolated pieces of the total reality, language creates the very condition of error, of incomplete perception, that binds us in ignorance and suffering....Since language at its highest level is identical to the supreme reality, however, we may use that which binds us as a tool for awakening and liberation...the most potent tantric instrument for liberation is a small unit of language, the mantra....

>It is necessary to recognize that what is presently considered human language constitutes merely the profane and fragmented residue of a primordial science. The origins of true language are not found in mundane communication, but in a cosmic technology, delivered to humanity by stellar intelligences whose nature has been obscured by time. What tradition has preserved as 'gods' or 'instructors' were, in essence, emissaries of a higher order, and the mythologies of the world are the ritualized echoes of these encounters.

"The human mind, unable to fully comprehend such phenomena, instinctively formalized the fragments of this advanced knowledge into systems of magic and religion. This process is perfectly illustrated by the modern 'cargo cults': isolated peoples, witnessing advanced technology, constructed rituals and replicas in an attempt to summon back its source. In an analogous manner, the ancient peoples ritualized the apparati and communications of non-terrestrial beings. Thus, the runic scripts, the resonant phonemes of Sanskrit, and the sacred diagrams of various traditions are not human inventions, but imperfect replicas, a ceremonial technology meant to interface with a lost source of power."

"Consequently, sacred alphabets are not mere vehicles for writing, but systems of vibrational engineering. Each rune or Sanskrit syllable functions as a glyph of resonance, a key intended to actuate specific forces within the fabric of reality. The myth of Odin discovering the runes while suspended from the World Tree, or the Rishis 'hearing' the Vedas in deep meditation, describes a contact with this supra-human intelligence, a download of a symbolic operating system. The confusion of tongues, recounted in the myth of Babel, signifies not a divine punishment, but the deliberate fragmentation of this unified system to prevent access to the 'source code' of creation. The various sacred alphabets, Futhark, Sanskrit, Ogham, etc, are the surviving lineages of this original Adamantine Language. Therefore, the ultimate purpose of the initiate is not merely to study these symbols, but to reassemble the fragments and reactivate their function, thereby resynchronizing with the cosmic transmitters from whom this knowledge first emanated."

The image is a painting that depicts a scene with four figures in a pastoral setting. The central figure is a man lying on a wooden stool, wearing a white robe with red stockings and a black hat. He is being attended to by two women, one on each side of him. The woman on the left is wearing a pink robe and a black hat, while the woman on the right is dressed in a white robe and a black hat. Both women are holding objects, with the woman on the left holding a small object that appears to be a book or a small container. The background shows a landscape with a river and a distant building, suggesting a rural or countryside setting. The style of the painting is reminiscent of the Northern Renaissance, characterized by its attention to detail, realistic portrayal of clothing, and the use of naturalistic colors.

Magna Mater, the sister and wife of Cronus or Saturn. Tacitus likewise relates the speculation that the name Judaei, from which Jew is derived, is "the barbarous lengthening of Idaei." Indeed, with the daktyloi Idaioi or Idaean dactyls, a mythical race of dwarves born of Rhea, we find a symbol for proto-Jews or Jews that appears with the Egyptian Ptah and the Greek Hephaestus, often indicated their master. demonic entity that described itself as Caxuulikom - a venomous, spiteful and overwhelmingly evil and negative being whose origins could be traced back to ancient Babylon, and who outrageously mocked those present, laughed and spat in their frightened faces, and bragged in a literally hysterical and maniacal fashion about the way in which the world was being fooled into believing that aliens were among us, when, in reality, the forces of the Prince of Darkness himself were readying and steadying themselves for the final confrontation with the powers of good. Not only that, asserted Manners, but Caxuulikom informed those present that the Earth was a farm and nothing else, that energy derived from the souls of the Human Race and indeed from every living creature on the planet was being harvested as a means to feed the minions of Satan, and that the E.T. motif was merely the latest ingenious ruse under which such actions were being secretly undertaken.

"The post-diluvian period is, thus, the era of indirect control. The "Brotherhood" of which Bramley speaks is but the remaining structure of the Elohim, which continues to manage humanity through wars and cultural resets, ensuring its ignorance and servitude (The Wardens). The anomalies cataloged by Charles Fort are the visible residues of this ecosystem of manipulation, flaws in the fabric of an official history that hides our condition as property. The works of Lovecraft, Howard, and Tolkien, as well as the theories of Liebenfels, emerge, therefore, as literary and doctrinal echoes of these archaic events. They are involuntary testimonies to a deeper truth: that humanity is the involuntary heir of a cosmic war, and its history, a palimpsest upon which can still be read, for those who possess the eyes to see, the traces of its origin and its fall."

I find this offensive. I know you Americanos are obsessed with your own media and love smelling your own smugger and farts like the French but your chosen symbolism isn't more important than others.

Also, he does not belong to any particular region, tribe, or nation.

The only thing the Jews can lay claim to is being traitors, whom by consequence has dragged the rest of the planet into their treason by choosing another entity unrelated to the creators of the world.

Pettiness, greed, revenge. Who the fuck knows.

But their god is now Aten.

The image is a digital artwork with a surrealistic style. At the center, there is a figure with a white beard and a grayish complexion, wearing a green robe. The figure appears to be a person with a surprised or shocked expression. The figure is holding two large, rectangular objects that are not clearly visible due to the blurriness. The background is a vibrant green with a swirling, abstract pattern that gives the impression of a magical or mystical aura. The text on the objects is in a non-Latin script, which is not clearly readable. The overall color scheme is predominantly green with hints of yellow and white. The style of the image is reminiscent of digital art from the late 20th century, with a focus on surrealism and fantasy elements.

Searching for the name of god...

>The most common story is that the Rabbi used a shem, a slip of paper with God's name written on it, to keep the golem animated. The shem, placed within the mouth of the golem, gave it life.

>The story begins in medievalSpain. In the late 1200s, a Jewish mystic by the name ofAbraham Abulafiasat down at a table in his small house in Barcelona, picked up a quill, dipped it in ink, and began combining the letters of the Hebrew alphabet in strange and seemingly random ways. Aleph with Bet, Bet with Gimmel, Gimmel with Aleph and Bet, and so on.

>Abulafia called this practice "the science of the combination of letters." He wasn't actually combining letters at random; instead he was carefully following a secret set of rules that he had devised while studying an ancient Kabbalistic text called theSefer Yetsirah. This book describes how God created "all that is formed and all that is spoken" by combining Hebrew letters according to sacred formulas. In one section, God exhausts all possible two-letter combinations of the 22 Hebrew letters.

>By studying theSefer Yetsirah, Abulafia gained the insight that linguistic symbols can be manipulated with formal rules in order to create new, interesting, insightful sentences. To this end, he spent months generating thousands of combinations of the 22 letters of the Hebrew alphabet and eventually emerged with a series of books that he claimed were endowed with prophetic wisdom.

>But other Jewish scholars considered this rudimentary language generation a dangerous act that bordered on the profane. The Talmud tells stories of rabbis who, by the magical act of permuting language according to the formulas set out in theSefer Yetsirah, created artificial creatures calledgolems. In these tales, rabbis manipulated the letters of the Hebrew alphabet to replicate God's act of creation, using the sacred formulas to imbue inanimate objects with life.

>In some of these myths, the rabbis used this skill for practical reasons, to makeanimalsto eat when hungry or servants to help them with domestic duties. But many of these golem stories end badly. In one particularly well-known fable,Judah Loew ben Bezalel, the 16th century rabbi of Prague, used the sacred practice of letter combinatorics to conjure a golem to protect the Jewish community from antisemitic attacks, only to see the golem turn violently on him instead.

>This "science of the combination of letters" was a rudimentary form ofnatural language processing, as it involved combining letters of the Hebrew alphabet according to specific rules. For Kabbalists, it was a double-edged sword: a way to access new forms of knowledge and wisdom, but also an inherently dangerous practice that could bring about unintended consequences.

>This tension reappears throughout the long history of language processing, and still echoes in discussions about the most cutting-edge NLP technology of our digital era. View SameGoogleiqdbSauceNAOTrace Golem_by_Philippe_Semeria.jpg, 106KiB, 500x840

>The first account of a golem being created is of God creating Adam. "In the second hour, [Adam] became a golem... During the third hour, his limbs were stretched out. In the fourth hour, the soul was cast into him..." (B. Sanhedrin 38b). In the Tehillim, the Hebrew word GoLeMI is translated as the process by which God created man. Jeffrey

Smith says, "We ourselves are golemim and golemahot until God comes along and makes us fully human, making us living souls by breathing in the 'breath of life.'" It is believed that Abraham studied God's teachings and wrote the Sefer Yetzirah. He studied with Shem, son of Noah, and tradition holds that he created souls with this knowledge.

>Abba Ben Rav Hamma (299-353 C.E.), better known as Rava, studied the Sefer Yetzirah along with Rabbi Zera. They studied for three years, created a cow, forgot the knowledge, studied for another three years, and created another cow. The Talmud goes on to say that Rava has surpassed the need for an assistant. "Rava created a man and sent him to R. Zera. The rabbi spoke to him but he did not answer. Then he said, 'You are from the pietists. Return to your dust.'" (B, Sanhedrin, 65b). This is the only man-shaped golem mentioned in the Talmud. However, In B Sanhedrin 67b it states that every Friday Rabbis Hanina and Hoshia studied the Sefer Yetzira to create a prime calf, which they ate as their Sabbath dinner (Honigsberg).

In Jewish pedo-initiate Spielberg's "AI" (what a pity the infinitely more talented Kubrick couldn't finish it), the robot child's "imprint mode" is activated by pronouncing a cryptographic sequence of ten unrelated words. Did each paranoid warlord have his own army of biorobots whose access keys, generated by the cube, he alone possessed? Did this give rise to an inevitable "arms race" between different "mighty men" that ended with everybody fighting everybody, the last pre-Flood Black Cube destroyed, and the world suddenly overrun with genetically engineered homunculi who had all been programmed with different languages, the keys to which were lost to boot?

First, it is necessary to keep in mind that we need to integrate the geocentric basis of esotericism with a perceived heliocentric reality, because from this stems 80% of the systems and understandings of the astral, divine, demonic, zodiacal, etc. Are we in a closed system or in a vast universe? What is the nature of the Earth? This matters.

To understand source code is to intrinsically understand both the nature and structure of the macrocosm and its reflection, which is us. While this goes beyond whatever parsing the intellect is capable of, intellect and intuition are basis when applied correctly.

So how do we integrate geocentric with heliocentric, closed or vast universe etc. ?

It's both, and can be partly explained by wave-particle duality and superposition, but this doesn't integrate as the separation still stands, even if illusory.

First we'll have to backtrack a bit, go deeper. Most are aware the whole modern physics model is retarded, wave function is deemed nonexistent, pure mathematics, and the bulk of the universe consisting of "dark matter" and "dark energy" is inexplicable. All done deliberately to keep humans ignorant and dependant.

Reductionist scientific methods just keep revealing smaller "particles" that become less and less observable or measurable.

>The Uncertainty Principle, formulated by Werner Heisenberg, states that we can't know the exact position and momentum/velocity of a particle at the same time with perfect accuracy; the more we know about the photon or electrons speed, the less we know about its position, and vice versa.

There is no spoon, only aetheric fields causing apparent perceptual and relative density.

>CHIMin The Elder Scrolls lore represents a state of enlightenment and self-awareness achieved by very few mortals. It's essentially the realization that all of reality is a dream within the mind of the Godhead, Anu. Those who achieve CHIM understand their existence is merely a construct within this dream, but rather than being erased from existence by this truth, they maintain their individuality and self. They effectively become co-creators of their own reality within the larger dream, gaining the ability to reshape the world around them through sheer force of will. It's a precarious state, as acknowledging the Godhead and the nature of reality can also lead to Zero Summing, the complete erasure of one's existence.

Corroborated by Serrano, if the "I" is completely destroyed then all that remains is the demiurge. Seldom redpilled, SavitriDevinoted their inability to act.

>But what Esoteric Hitlerism can not forget is that incarnation, sacrifice, the 'falling in love of the Aesir with the daughters of men,' by the 'she' imprisoned by the Demiurge, may be more than a defeat, a fall, more a strategy favored to win Immortality and Resurrection in the final Combat that, without thinking or dreaming as much, has made possible 'something never imagined by even the greatest utopians...' This object is surrounded by a bright, red glow that radiates outward from its center, creating a striking contrast against the dark sky. The glow is so intense that it illuminates the surrounding area, creating a dramatic effect.

The background of the image is dominated by a dark sky filled with stars, which suggests that the event is occurring in outer space. The sky is not completely dark, as there are bright patches of light scattered throughout, possibly indicating the presence of a planet or another celestial body.

In the foreground, there is a landscape with a few trees and a field, providing a sense of scale to the grandeur of the celestial event. The trees and field are silhouetted against the bright glow of the shooting star, further emphasizing its prominence in the image. There are no visible texts or discernible human-made objects in the image, and the style of the photograph is realistic, capturing the natural beauty of the scene without any artistic filters or alterations. The image is a testament to the awe-inspiring power of celestial events and the beauty of the natural world.

Accuate, dream is exactly how I experienced this life, waking up was exponentially more real than this, as is this life to our own dreams. Hence an experience that cannot be denied personally. Reality is literally a dream, stepped down reflections related to the 72 winds that manifest reality.

Often wondered how many layers its stepped down: a dream of a dream of a dream, at least 3 from my own experience, but nothing I saw would negate the possibility of more layers. First dream is demiurge, not base reality, so at least one beyond that.

The black sun is the pineal gland, the single eye cut off by the fall into duality and stranded in the underworld. The moon is the left eye and the sun the right, as per general esoteric cosmology. As with the actual model, light is projected by the black sun/pineal and reflected/rendered by the sun and moon/eyes. A secondary interaction that is considered primary, shadows on the wall of the cave. This has always been the esoteric understanding of sight and the pineal gland, the all seeing eye.

>The pineal gland perceives reality in its pure quantum holographic (aetheric) form. This perception goes far beyond our immediate surroundings encompassing probabilities, timelines, and extra dimensional lifeforms.

>That perception is then blended with the point of view of the perceiver. In psychoanalytic language: external reality is blended with our unconscious reality.

Seems like a shit deal, and it is, especially because it has been co-opted and manipulated by the demiurge and Saturnian black rock cultists, but the original split was a fall and the operating system reflects this downgrade. Ultimately the Anima is absolutely loyal and works in our best interests to the best of her ability. The amount of data that is filtered can and does break peoples minds if perceived all at once ie. >In the second site we found a natural vibration of geological origin coming from subsoil affecting mind. We found this by traditional archaeoacoustic method (digital recorders and ultra-sensitive microphones). Normally low frequencies can affect mind because interfering with brain wave which have a low frequency of movement. We also must remember that brain activity is not only electric, but also magnetic, so also magnetic fields who very frequently match geological vibrations can modify the state of mind.

>In our researches we demonstrated that some physical phenomena (vibrations, magnetic fields) present at such sites, can influence brain activity given the style of the writing and the presence of a compass rose. The page is filled with handwritten text and diagrams, predominantly in Latin. The text is written in a script that is characteristic of the medieval era, with some cursive and others in a more formal, scripted style. The diagrams include a compass rose, which is a tool used to measure angles and distances, and a spherical diagram, which is a representation of a sphere. The page is divided into two columns, with the left column containing the text and the right column containing the diagrams. The page is old and worn, with some areas of discoloration and fading, suggesting it has been exposed to the elements for a long time. The overall style of the image is historical and academic, with a focus on the historical and scientific aspects of the manuscript.

>Archaeoacoustics should therefore not only consider analyzing the acoustic properties of the site, but also all the associated physical phenomena which is not perceived by the ears which could potentially influence a population and their perception of a particular site as being sacred. Using such technologies, we observed a change of emotional state in various volunteers after they remained for some time in sacred sites especially by vibration, audible (as a chant or a drum) in particular in connection with resonance phenomenon or not audible (natural infrasounds, ultrasounds). So it looks that mechanical vibrations are only one aspect of the possibility for affecting human mind, because also magnetic fields can affect human mind.

The image is a black and white illustration featuring a large, tentacled creature with multiple tentacles and a prominent eye. The creature appears to be emerging from a dark, rocky landscape with a narrow, pointed archway leading into it. The archway is flanked by two smaller, more slender arches on either side. The creature's tentacles are intertwined and extend outwards, creating a sense of chaos and movement.

In the background, there are other elements that contribute to the overall dark and mysterious atmosphere. There are jagged, jagged lines and shapes that resemble otherworldly structures or creatures, suggesting a fantastical or otherworldly setting.

At the bottom of the image, there is text that reads "YOG-SOITH," which could be a title or a name associated with the artwork. The text is in a bold, capitalized font that stands out against the monochrome background. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of the dark fantasy genre, with its use of dark colors and intricate details.

The image is a painting that depicts a chaotic scene of a city under siege. The cityscape is filled with buildings that appear to be in ruins, with some structures partially collapsed or burning. The sea is turbulent with waves crashing against the shore, and there are numerous figures in the foreground, some of whom appear to be fleeing or running away from the chaos.

In the foreground, there is a large statue of a figure with a green hat, which seems to be holding a large shield or a weapon. The statue is positioned on a raised platform, and the figure is facing towards the right side of the painting. The background is dominated by a large, dark, and ominous sky with clouds, and the overall color palette is dominated by dark tones, with the exception of the green hat of the statue.

The painting style is realistic with a focus on the details of the city and the actions of the figures. The genre of the artwork is historical, likely depicting a scene from ancient or medieval times, given the architectural style and the overall atmosphere of the scene.

There are no visible texts or inscriptions within the image.

The hymn the Egyptians sung was known as the music of the spheres, its provenance ancient, from Atlantis before the sea swallowed its now sunken shores.

>In Egypt the priests, when singing hymns in praise of the gods, employ the seven vowels, which they utter in due succession; and the sound of these letters is so euphonious that men listen to it in place of aulos and cithara." (DeElocutione -

Demetrius)

>Pythagorean numerology of Nicomachus of Gerasa, vowels are unspeakable and related to the consonants as the soul is related to the body.

"The sacred language of the tantras is mantra. This means that the syllables that comprise a word resonate to a pitch that evokes the prototypical nature of the form that is being articulated. When the master is questioned on this point, he is evasive regarding the specific relationship between sound and form. But there is no ignoring his conviction that sound is intimately related to the realm of form and has the power to affect it. The Indian story of one of the great uṣṭad sitarists of an earlier generation, whose instrument burst into flame during a perfect rendition of a fire raga, is explained in terms of the uṣṭad's ability to reproduce the sound of the seed-syllable of the element fire precisely, so creating fire itself. However, it is a general principle in many sacred traditions that it is not so much the form of the consonants as the power and thoughtform inserted into the vowel sound by a master, a siddha, that is efficacious. That the resonance that vibrates in an inanimate object, such as a fine wine glass, a conch shell, or a singing bowl, is of the nature of vowels rather than consonants supports this notion." (Flight of the Garuda)

The text is divided into two main sections. The first section is titled "Monkey's Business" and is numbered 77. It begins with a statement that defines the concept of the "monkey's business" as "the secret, Hermetic first makes an innovation, passing God's word to the monkey, and the monkey, in turn, passes it to the monkey's father, who passes it to the monkey's mother, and so on, until the monkey receives the word, 17:21."

The second section is titled "Monkey's Business" and is numbered 78. It continues the discussion of the "monkey's business" and discusses the creation of the first written language. It mentions that the "monkey's business" is the creation of the first written language, which is "the secret, Hermetic first makes an innovation, passing God's word to the monkey, and the monkey, in turn, passes it to the monkey's father, who passes it to the monkey's mother, and so on, until the monkey receives the word, 17:21."

The text also includes a diagram labeled "Fig. 1: The two series of words, with number further." The diagram shows two pyramids with the words "monkey's business" written on them, with the words "monkey's business" written in the first pyramid and "monkey's business" written in the second pyramid.

The text is written in a formal and academic style, with references to various sources such as "J. G. F. Hutton, The Origin of Writing and the Writing of Man, the 'Flower of the Garden of Eden' and the 'Tree of Life,' in 'The Book of Genesis,' 1928, London: Kegan Paul, 2:24." and "J. G. F. Hutton, 'The Origin of Writing and the Writing of Man,' in 'The Book of Genesis,' 1928, London: Kegan Paul, 2:24."

The text is in a larger font size compared to the surrounding text, which is typical for academic or formal documents. The page number "46" is visible at the top right corner of the image, indicating that this is a screenshot from a larger document. The image is in portrait orientation, and the text is in a dark color, which contrasts with the lighter background, making the text easily readable.

>The vowels and nomina barbara appear in a context where Hermes and his son are seeking admittance to the Ogdoad, the eighth sphere above the fixed stars. The son of Hermes is normally called Tat in the other Hermetic treatises, and I will refer to him as such in the following. In On the rebirth, Tat was reborn as constituted of ten divine powers, and Hermes promised him that he would be able to see the Ogdoad if he applied himself. This promise is made good on in the present treatise.

>Before the ascent, Hermes first makes an invocation, praising God's creative and ruling power and calling him «the invisible god to whom one speaks in silence», and then utters the first string of vowels framed by the two nomina barbara. After this, Tat receives the vision of the Ogdoad and of the Ennead, which are described enthusiastically, if not quite systematically. At the end of the visionary ascent we find the second string of vowels, this time with no nomina barbara. Note that the vowels are not divided into separate lines in the manuscript, but are given continuously. The stylistic arrangement of the vowels can however be found in the magical papyri, and it is likely that their original arrangement was something like this (picrel)

>We have to take not the angle velocities, as Kepler did, but the orbital velocities (e.g. the Earth circles round the Sun). By calculating these velocities at those points where the planets are at the distance of their semi-minor axis from the Sun and relating these with the aphelion (when the planet is farthest from the Sun) velocities, we find a very precise correspondence with musical intervals. The probability of this result being purely by chance is only about 1:1600. In other words, there is a certainty of 99.9% that this is proof that the harmony of the spheres, believed to exist by Pythagoras, Kepler and many others, is more than a 'beautiful dream' as it is often called in scientific literature. >Cuneiform tablets translated since the early 1960s have allowed music archaeologists to reconstruct the Mesopotamian tonal system. The consensus is that, for over a millennium, from at least 1800 BC onward, the Mesopotamians used seven diatonic modes — scales that are closely related to the Western, sevennote major scale. Furthermore, the Mesopotamian method of re-tuning stringed instruments from one mode to another, created five extra pitches that correspond with what, in the West, are called sharps and flats. On one particular tablet, these notes are understood to be generated as consecutive “fifths,” suggesting that the “cycle of fifths” — a circular arrangement of the twelve pitches that make up an octave — was known to the Mesopotamians.

Here we find origin of the seven days of the week, Germanic/Roman syncretism in modern terms. Intrinsic to the Mesopotamian tonal system is the sequence 4,1,5,2,6,3,7, which produces the circle of fifths, and was later taught to Pythagoras. Take the number sequence and overlay it on orbital frequency (picrel) to find the days of the week, the Mithraic/alchemical order of ascent through the spheres, and basis of the chakras.

>In Timaeus, Plato's treatise on Pythagorean cosmology, the central character, Timaeus of Locri (possibly a real person), describes how the Demiurge divided the World Soul into harmonic intervals. Having blended the three ingredients of the World Soul — Sameness, Difference and Existence — into a kind of malleable stuff, the Demiurge took a strip of it and divided its length into portions measured by the numbers forming two geometrical series of four terms each: 1, 2, 4, 8 and 1, 3, 9, 27, generated by multiplying 1 by 2 and 3 (Fig. 1). This became known as "Plato's Lambda" because of its resemblance to  $\Lambda$ , the Greek letter lambda. Then, according to Timaeus:

"he went on to fill up both the double and the triple intervals, cutting off yet more parts from the original mixture and placing them between the terms, so that within each interval there were two means, the one (harmonic)\* exceeding the one extreme and being exceeded by the other by the same fraction of the extremes, the other (arithmetic) exceeding the one extreme by the same number whereby it was exceeded by the other. These links gave rise to intervals of  $\frac{3}{2}$  and  $\frac{4}{3}$  and  $\frac{9}{8}$  within the original intervals. And he went on to fill up all the intervals of  $\frac{4}{3}$  (i.e., fourths) with the interval of  $\frac{9}{8}$  (the tone), leaving over in each a fraction. This remaining interval of the fraction had its terms in the numerical proportion of 256 to 243 (semitone). By this time, the mixture from which he was cutting off these portions was all used up"

In the bottom part of the image, there are two diagrams. The first diagram is labeled "Figure 2: The Lendla Tetraktys." It shows a triangle with a red line running through it, indicating the frequency of the notes of the Tetrachord. The second diagram is labeled "Figure 3: The Lendla Tetraktys." It is a graphical representation of the Tetrachord, with the red line running through it.

The image is a digital representation, likely used for educational or informational purposes, and it is designed to convey the concept of the Tetrachord in a clear and concise manner.

Reason why the Lambda has no wiki page while every faggot jew you have never heard of does.

>The three numbers missing from the Lambda are shown in red in Figure 2. The sum of the 10 integers is 90 and the sum of the integers 1, 8 & 27 at the corners of the tetractys is 36. The seven integers at the centre and corners of the grey hexagon shown in Figure 2 with dashed edges add up to 54. Hence, the 36:54 division displayed by the Lambda Tetractys differentiates between its corners, which correspond to the Supernal Triad of the Tree of Life, and its seven hexagonal yods, which correspond to the seven Sephiroth of Construction (see here). The division is shown by all holistic systems, as many of the articles on this website prove. Historians of science and musical scholars have focussed upon the integers as "number weights" whose significance is that their ratios are the tone ratios of the notes of the Pythagorean musical scale. They paid no attention to the magnitude of the numbers themselves because, influenced by the connotation given by Plato that their ratios determined the more important tone ratios, they seemed to have no relevance to music or anything else. The author's research into various sacred geometries and holistic systems indicates that this is untrue. The number 90 is always present in such systems as a defining parameter, as this section will demonstrate.

>The Lambda Tetractys has been regarded as nothing more than a heuristic device for generating the tone ratios of musical notes. Instead, it has profound, fundamental meaning, for — together with its tetrahedral generalisation to be described shortly — it characterizes the very nature of holistic systems.

>It is the arithmetic counterpart of the holistic pattern that sacred geometries embody.

Below the title, there is a large, dark, black silhouette of a planet with a bright, white sun in the center, surrounded by a ring of stars. The planet appears to be in a space setting with a view of the Earth below.

In the foreground, there is a large, metallic, futuristic spacecraft with a pointed nose and a large, circular, metallic structure on its side. The spacecraft is surrounded by smaller spacecraft and other space debris, suggesting a space battle or conflict.

The background of the poster is a dark, starry sky with a large, dark, black silhouette of a planet with a bright, white sun in the center, surrounded by a ring of stars. The overall color scheme of the poster is predominantly dark, with the exception of the bright, white sun and the metallic spacecraft, which stand out against the dark background.

At the bottom of the poster, there is a website address in white text:

"www.IronSky4.net." The style of the image is realistic with a focus on space and science fiction elements.

My first girlfriend, a Slavic Jew who took my virginity, used to call me "donkey dick" ...

What does it all mean?

Lucky to have discerning parents anon.

As with most things these creatures do there is exoteric and esoteric "justifications" for circumcision, trauma and dissociation, induced sexual dysfunction leading to degeneracy, covenant with yhwh for jews, ritual slave brand for Aryans, energetic implant/seal of Saturn etc. At base its more in line with the jewish female tradition, dark Venus/Asherah, Lilith and lunar energy, blood magic and vampirism, old practices from the groves. They use the blood from circumcision and sacrifice for various rituals and magic cures.

>rather than explain the need for the blood of a Christian child, the defendants were attempting to provide a description of the wonderful therapeutic and magical properties of blood generally, and of blood extracted from children and young persons in particular >Camporesi wrote, “a sacred and alchemistic haemostatic, blood (and not incorrectly, in epochs in which hemorrhages represented a terrible tragedy, was considered a powerful healant”

Blood from the young has scientifically proven curative properties when transfused, and was often consumed with this in mind eg. Elizabeth Báthory. Even with non-jews does anyone know what really happens to the foreskins afterwards, you know, besides the skin cream.

>Are foreskins used in cosmetics; is a question that has been asked numerous times. The answer to this controversial topic is yes, and it may come as a surprise to many. Foreskins contain fibroblasts, which are cells that produce collagen and other proteins necessary for skin care products.

Jews are vampires with high levels of blood lust, likely related to Neanderthal genetics. There seems to be dual reasoning and single cannibalistic purpose, they used the powdered blood of sacrificed Aryans to stop bleeding and cure circumcision wounds of their own infants, then drank and bathed in their own infants blood while consuming the foreskins.

>The physician Giuseppe di Riva del Garda, known as the “hunchbacked Jew”, who had circumcised Angelo’s sons, normally used it during the course of the holy operation. Obviously, Maestro Tobias, who rightly considered himself a medical expert, also knew how to prepare the magic haemostatic: “You take the blood, allowing it to coagulate; then you dry it and make a powder out of it, which can be used in so many different ways”.

>The Jews accused of ritual child murder at Tyrnau in Hungary in 1494 also declared, among other things, that they had used powdered blood as a circumcision haemostatic

>He then takes a glass of wine [...] and bathes the infant's mouth with the wine in which he spat out the sucked blood

>It is at this point”, the rabbinical response continues, “that all the young males wash themselves in that water, in memory of the blood of the pact, which has united God to our patriarch Abraham”. In this rite, of a propitiatory nature, the blood from the circumcision wound, united with the sweet-smelling potion, is said to have possessed the ability to transform itself into a potent aphrodisiac

The moon is artificial, yes, it was built.

"We will be entering an euhemerist perspective, so keep in mind that we will be talking about a vast three-dimensional space, with multiple realms and star systems, not the geocentric system. We will be talking about the vast universe, within the understanding of the electrical universe, hollow celestial bodies, etc."

>Most people are fully aware that the Moon is tiny compared to the Sun, but that it is much closer to us, causing them to appear as equal discs. To be precise, the Moon is 400 times smaller than the star at the centre of our solar system, yet it is also just 1/400th of the distance between the Earth and the Sun. Whilst the surprisingly neat number of 400 for relative size and distance is apparently an amusing coincidence of the decimal counting system, the odds against this optical illusion happening at all are huge. Experts are deeply puzzled by the phenomenon. Isaac Asimov, the respected scientist and science-fiction guru, described this perfect visual alignment as being "the most unlikely coincidence imaginable." This perfect fit of the lunar and solar discs is a very human perspective because it only works from the viewpoint of someone standing on the Earth's surface. But the magic of the Moon's movements above our heads goes to even more astonishing levels. By some absolutely incomprehensible quirk of nature, the Moon also manages to precisely imitate the perceived annual movements of the Sun each month.

>The best explanation for the Moon is observational error – the Moon does not exist!' Attributed to Irwin Shapiro of The HarvardSmithsonian Center for Astrophysics

>The Big Whack cannot explain the extraordinary ratio relationship between the Moon and the Sun or the Moon and the Earth. The Moon could, by pure chance, end up being exactly 1/400th the size of the Sun and occupying an orbit that allows it to stand 1/400th the distance between the Earth and the Sun – but the odds are, quite literally, astronomically against it. The Moon is proportionally bigger in relation to its host planet than any other in the solar system, apart from Charon, Pluto's moon, which is more than half the diameter of Pluto. These two bodies are essentially twin planets or may be asteroids orbiting each other at close range, although they are believed to have an unrelated origin. Mercury has no moons at all, and neither has Venus. Mars does have two moons, but they are tiny in comparison with our own.

>Another study looked into human aggression and the lunar synodic cycle occurring in Dade County, Florida. Data on five aggressive and/or violent human behaviours were examined to determine whether a relationship existed between the two. These included looking at the pattern of homicides, suicides, fatal traffic accidents, aggravated assaults, and psychiatric emergency room visits.

>The team concluded that homicides and aggravated assaults demonstrated a statistically significant clustering of cases around the full Moon. Psychiatric emergency room visits clustered around the first quarter and showed a significantly decreased frequency around new and full Moon. The suicide curve showed correlations with both aggravated assaults and fatal traffic accidents, suggesting, they say, a self-destructive component for each of these behaviours. The existence of a biological rhythm of human aggression, which resonates with the lunar synodic cycle, was postulated.

"The book I'm citing is written by a physicalist author who accepts evolutionary interpretations and much of the historiography, stratigraphy, etc. Logically, it's distorted and contaminated by materialist subversion, however, he is correct in identifying that this solar system underwent planetary engineering, something we will observe in the book Saturn Death Cult (not by intelligence, but by natural causes) and in Ringmakers of Saturn... The mistake of those who speak of the theory of the electric universe where our system was captured by the sun is believing that it was purely a natural process; it wasn't. There was a race of forerunners who built this system; Christopher Knight calls them UCA."

>The UCA realized that it needed to draw further attention to the artificial nature of the regulator by building on a truly fundamental number that represented the planet. The number that was chosen was the planet's spin rate per orbit of the star, which would have to be instantly recognizable as a value that was unique to the planet – a natural PIN (personal identification number) for an entire world. So, in this case, it was a Planetary Identification Number that was required. At the required time window, the planet would be rotating at a rate of 366 revolutions for each orbit around its mother star, and the use of the number value 366 would therefore be easily spotted as the Planetary Identification Number.

>The intelligent creatures would recognize the PIN number from an early date, as it requires only very basic astronomy to appreciate that this three-digit number is the most fundamental of all numbers that are unique to the planet. Surely these Earth-dwelling creatures would be very surprised when they calculated the relative size of their planet to the orbiting regulator and discovered that the one is 366 per cent larger than the other. The regulator was also engineered with a PIN number that was meaningful to the intended intelligent creatures. That number would be the reciprocal of the planet's PIN number – the mirror image of 366. The mathematics was simplicity itself. The regulator's PIN number would be arrived at by considering its size as 100 per cent and dividing it by the relative size of the planet, namely 366 per cent. Working to five decimal places, the result is:  $100/366 = 0.27322$

>The regulator was then carefully engineered so that at the key point in time it would be orbiting the planet at a rate of once every 27.322 planetary days.

"The Moon is literally, in both models of existence (geocentric and heliocentric), the fluidic mirror where the "simulation" of the matrix is projected onto the earth, from the computational "calculations" of destiny woven in Saturn. Or vice versa, where it is rendered on the imaginal fluidic plane on the moon and then projected onto Saturn, written in destiny, then descends to earth, "calcifying" samsara."

"If the builders of the Moon are evil, and the solar gods that came later are a deliberate confusion, who remains?"

"The answer lies in what we call the "good instructors and aryan ancestors." They would be neither "lunar" nor "solar" in the later, corrupted sense of these terms. They would belong to a prior and superior order, perhaps associated with a pre-lunar and pre-material state of consciousness (the "Pelasgians" and "Proselenes" of legend)."

"Their symbol, therefore, would not be the Sun or the Moon of our current sky (which are pieces of the machine), but something like:"

>The "Black Light" or "Black Sun" (a spiritual, non-physical sun).

>The "Polar Star" (a fixed axis outside the system of cycles).

>The "Void" or "The Source" prior to the creation of the material Matrix.

"In the sky of this simulation, solar archetypes are presented as the "good" alternative to the "evil" lunar ones. But the true exit, according to the text's radical cosmology, lies in rejecting the entire artificial sky and seeking the origin that is prior and external to it."

Considered to be an analogue computer with gear ratios representing the harmony of the spheres and Pythagorean cosmology, the Antikythera mechanism (200 BC) tracks complex astrological data, including the elliptical movement of the moon, something not "discovered" by Kepler until 1620 AD. With no known antecedent technology scientists claim to be baffled as to provenance, all the while ignoring the textual evidence of steampunk style automations, near perfect "mechanical men" and many other described devices indicative of lost tech and fallen civilization.

Obviously these scientists, these brilliant luminaries of post modern excellence, are unable to follow thought to logical conclusion. Sometimes a sign of complicity, but more likely the frequency derived obfuscation of mind fuckery. Why, because this specific case is so obvious, in plain sight with bells and whistles, driven by gears of course.

The Antikythera is usually matched to the first clocks in the 1400's, these things were actually pieces of shit. It is far more advanced, being described as a calculator, which involves added layers of complexity when compared to single function timekeeping. Counting vs calculating.

The first analogue mathematical calculator was invented by Blaise Pascal in 1642. So ancient Greek tech was at least at this level.

Those texts I mentioned, along with recent investigations into fallen civilizations, tell a far different story though, of complexity yet unmatched in "modern" days.

>Initially mistaken for debris, this fragmented object would later be identified as the Antikythera mechanism—a shoebox-sized device that has stunned archaeologists, engineers, and physicists for decades. Now housed at the National Archaeological Museum in Athens, the mechanism is often described as the world's first analog computer.

The image is a meme featuring two separate scenes. In the upper part, there is a wolf-like creature with a long tail standing in a foggy field. The wolf appears to be looking towards the viewer, and its fur is a dark color. The background is a muted greenish color, and the sky is overcast.

In the lower part of the image, there is a text overlay that reads "Satanic Pedophilia Elites" in a bold, capitalized font. Below this text, there is a subtitle that reads "Internet Racists" in a smaller, lowercase font. The text is in a yellow color, which stands out against the green background.

The overall style of the image is humorous and satirical, using a combination of visual elements to convey a message about the nature of certain individuals and their actions. The wolf in the upper part is a common symbol associated with the supernatural or mythical, while the text in the lower part is a play on the term "internet racists," which is a derogatory term used to describe people who engage in racist behavior online. The use of the wolf in the upper part could be seen as a metaphor for the wolfish behavior of certain individuals, while the text in the lower part could be seen as a commentary on the behavior of those who engage in online racist behavior.

The image is a graphic design with a black and white color scheme. At the top, there is a stylized, jagged triangle with the word "RI" in the center. Below this, there is a circular design with a pattern of concentric circles and a central, stylized letter "M" within the circle. To the right of the circular design, there is a silhouette of a person with a black hood, holding a red flag with a white "L" on it. The person appears to be facing away from the viewer.

In the background, there are four silhouetted objects resembling flying saucers or spacecraft. The saucers are positioned in a semi-circle formation, with one on the left, one in the center, one on the right, and one slightly behind the central saucer. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of propaganda or political art, with a focus on the central figure and the central "M" symbol.

On the subject of automatons, 95% of human decision making is unconscious, by monitoring brain activity studies have accurately predicted decisions up to 11 sec before they are consciously made. As mentioned earlier our species, constructed of clay, was considered a golem until life was breathed in via source code technology.

Have to wonder how much that operational 5% has been lost through attrition over time, obviously a lot of the autonomous nervous system works that way for a reason, conscious interference being inimicable. But how about yogis controlling breath, heart rate, and body temperature, or stories of pharmakeia priestesses altering their very internal chemical and energetic composition in order to produce various compounds as spiritual engineering, cures, and relating to that mysterious process of creating artificial life.

Seems the conscious portion of the mind is shrinking, and in many, just a fading memory, almost gone.

"It is considered, in light of a certain heterodox tradition, that divine archetypes represent transcendent operative principles, whose symbolic understanding was, in remote epochs, applied in an effective manner. The goddesses mentioned, Artemis of Ephesus, Isis, Aphrodite, Cybele, embody diverse facets of a single principle: the Autonomous Primordial Matrix, that is, the capacity for the generation of life independent of the paradigm of complementary duality."

"This potency is not merely allegorical. The statuary of Artemis, with its multiple breasts or eggs, and its association with the Melissae (bees), configures a precise symbolism of a serialized production of life, a ritually conducted parthenogenesis. In an analogous manner, the myth of Isis, who through the utterance of formulas restores life and generates Horus, reveals a protocol of magical insemination or ritual cloning, where the verb and knowledge replace ordinary biological means. Aphrodite, emerging from the fertilized sea foam, and Cybele, mistress of the fertile chaos, complete this picture, illustrating generation from primordial substances and vectors of pure desire."

"The beehive, therefore, emerges as the perfect model of this organic economy: a collective, hierarchical, and chemically controlled womb, where the queen, via pheromones, an intuitive hormonal engineering, ensures the continuity of life. The cosmic egg, a universal symbol, is the iconographic representation of this principle of autonomous incubation."

>One such ancient story centers on the bronze sentry Talos. Forged by Hephaestus, the Greek god of smiths and artisans, Talos was said to have guarded the island of Crete, off the coast of Greece. He patrolled the beaches three times a day, throwing boulders at enemy ships to ward off unwanted visitors to King Minos' domain.

>The Argonautica, an epic poem written by Apollonius of Rhodes in the third century B.C.E., chronicles the adventures of Jason and the Argonauts, including their encounter with Talos. After retrieving the legendary golden fleece, the heroes attempt to land on Crete's shores but find themselves blocked by Talos. Jason's lover, the sorceress Medea, starts singing, invoking "the death spirits, devourers of life, the swift hounds of Hades," according to a 20th-century translation of the Argonautica. She then directs "her hostile glance" toward Talos, bewitching him into grazing his ankle, which holds his only vulnerability.

>"Talos for a while stood on his tireless feet, swaying to and fro, then at last, all strengthless, fell with a mighty thud," the translation states. In some ways, this interaction might seem like a typical anecdote of an ancient hero and heroine meeting a divinely created obstacle and outsmarting their enemy. Entities magically endowed with life by the gods are not a rarity in Greek myth. Consider, for example, Galatea, a statue of a woman sculpted by Pygmalion as art, then brought to life by Aphrodite.

>Unlike Galatea, whose "realism became reality supernaturally," Talos was not merely created "by magic spells or divine fiat," writes Mayor. He was said to be engineered by Hephaestus, or rather "made, not born," in a process the ancients "might have called biotechné, from bios 'life' and techné, 'crafted through art or science.'"

>Talos was depicted in myth as a machine programmed to act human though never capable of achieving regular human life—what one might call a robot today.

>The Argonautica describes Talos' internal computational system in depth, outlining some of the wiring necessary to build a machine of this kind. "Now in all the rest of his body and limbs was he fashioned of bronze and invulnerable," the translation notes, "but beneath the sinew by his ankle was a blood-red vein, and this, with its issues of life and death, was covered by a thin skin."

>This "vein," perhaps better visualized as a tube, transported ichor, the ethereal liquid that flowed through the bodies of the ancient Greek gods. A nail or a bolt held the system together at Talos' ankle. In a sense, this ichor functioned like a power source or electricity, circulating through the robot's bronze limbs and fueling his movements and actions. If Talos' internal engineering was in any way disturbed, he would malfunction.

>"Talos, like modern ideas of cyborgs, ... was envisioned as a hybrid of living and nonliving parts," Mayor writes. "Through myths like that of Talos, ancients could contemplate whether an entity 'made, not born' was simply a mindless machine or an autonomous, sentient intelligence."

"Examples of automatons in ancient Greek myth abound. Homer's Iliad describes similarly advanced devices crafted by Hephaestus, including gold tripods that moved of their own volition and "female forms ... that moved and breathed in animated gold," anticipating the gods' needs and responding accordingly. Daedalus, the inventor who designed Minos' Labyrinth as a prison for the half-man, half-bull Minotaur, was said to have developed animated statues that rivaled Hephaestus' mechanical servants."

>What differentiates Talos from other legendary automatons, says Mayor, is the fact that he was the first such mythical being sent to earth to interact with humans. Unlike Hephaestus' self-moving tripods and golden women, which served the Olympian gods, Talos was exposed to humans for an extended period of time, and this seemingly led him to adopt some of their traits.

>Like Talos, Pandora, an artificial woman in Greek myth who had been manufactured from earthly materials by Hephaestus, was "made, not born." Sent to earth to punish humankind for accepting the gift of fire from the Titan Prometheus, Pandora had a single mission, Mayor says: "to be accepted into human society and then open [a] jar full of miseries." While Talos' time among humans influenced his way of thinking, Pandora never adapted to her environment or pursued a course of action unrelated to her purpose. In this way, Mayor argues, Pandora is akin to an A.I. agent created solely for infiltration and disruption.

Stolen history people have amassed quite a lot of evidence red mercury in liquid form was used to power aetheric tech before last fall 300yrs ago, then back into antiquity.

>Despite this, you can find it being hawked on social media and on numerous websites. Tiny amounts are sometimes priced at thousands of dollars.

>"So he turns to a sheikh in Saudi Arabia, a faith healer, who tells him there's this magical substance that is found buried in the throats of mummies in ancient Egypt. And if you go to Egypt and ask this archaeologist, he will be able to provide you with red mercury."

>After witnessing this exchange, an astonished Prof Wynn discovered this was not a new experience for Dr Hawass and his colleagues. They often encountered Arabs who believed red mercury was a magic cure-all buried with the pharaohs.

>Red mercury's supposedly amazing qualities don't end there. It is alleged to have powers to summon jinns - Arabic for supernatural beings.

>Police began investigating the hoax after these very ordinary household objects started changing hands for tens of thousands of dollars.

In physical terms both the red and white elixirs are generally considered to consist of monatomic high spin state molecules.

"They certainly knew about monatomic elements and superconductors, even if they didn't understand the science behind them. There were various names and terms for these phenomena in different cultures. As for the scientific aspects, maybe they didn't know specifically that these magical powders resonated with DNA or that they were immune system enhancers but they undoubtedly knew of their healing and anti-ageing properties. They also told of levitation, movement into parallel dimensions, communication with gods, and the like. In so many instances, their descriptions were commensurate with modern scientific discoveries; they just used different terminology. They might not have known precisely what they were dealing with, but they clearly knew about the substances in action."

>Over a number of weeks, they gave measured doses of monatomic supplements to ten volunteers—males and females of varying ages. The results were quite staggering. Their EEG brain scans showed a significant enhancement of alpha waves, leading to perfect hemispheric left and right brain synchronization. This facilitates heightened learning ability, memory and creative skills, and a substantial lowering of the stress factor.

The image displays a stone sculpture of a figure, which appears to be a representation of a person. The figure is depicted with a long, flowing hairstyle that reaches down to the shoulders. The hair is intricately carved with what seems to be a pattern or design, possibly representing hair or hair-like elements. The figure's face is not visible, but the head is adorned with a large, ornate headdress or crown. The headdress is detailed with what could be interpreted as feathers or decorative elements.

The figure is depicted with a pair of hands, one of which is raised in a gesture that could be interpreted as a gesture of greeting or offering. The hands are adorned with what appears to be jewelry, including what could be interpreted as rings or other adornments. The background of the image is a solid, dark blue color, which contrasts with the brownish hue of the sculpture, making the figure stand out prominently. At the bottom of the image, there is text that reads "Ashurah" and "Old-world Egyptian," indicating that the sculpture is likely from the ancient Egyptian civilization. The text is in a smaller font size compared to the main title, and it is positioned at the bottom of the image, providing context to the subject of the sculpture.

The style of the image is a close-up photograph, focusing on the sculpture and providing a clear view of its details. The lighting in the image is even, with no harsh shadows, which helps to highlight the textures and details of the sculpture. The image is a high-resolution photograph, likely taken with a professional camera, as evidenced by the clarity and detail of the sculpture and the text.

Did you know that Jerusalem literally means "City of Lucifer" (kek)?

Urushalim

It literally means "City of Shalim"

Shalim was the god of twilight, Hesperus, that is, Lucifer...

The etymology of Shalom is SHALIM, lol!

>A Ugaritic myth known as The Gracious and Most Beautiful Gods describes Shalim and his brother Shahar as descendants of El through two women he meets by the seashore. Both are nursed by "The Lady," probably Asherah, and have appetites as great as "one lip to the earth and one lip to the sky." In other Ugaritic texts, the two are associated with the sun goddess. Another inscription is a phrase repeated three times in a paramythological text: "That I may invoke the gracious gods, the voracious gods of Ym." Ym, in most Semitic languages, means "day," and Shalim and Shahar, twin deities of dusk and dawn, were conceived as its beginning and end.

The Amarna letters are very interesting, as they reveal the vassal dynamics of the Canaanites towards Israel. The habiru (Hebrews) were literal disorderly desert pirates who plundered, destroyed, and killed wherever they went.

Letter from Abdi-Heba to the Pharaoh:

>To the king, my lord, thus says 'Abdi-Heba, your servant. At the feet of the king, my lord, seven times and seven times I prostrate myself. Behold, this land of Urushalim was given to me neither by my father nor by my mother; it was the mighty arm of the king that placed me in my father's house. Behold, the deeds of Milkilu and the deeds of the sons of Lab'ayu have delivered the king's land to the Habiru. Behold, O king, my lord, I am unjustly accused before the king. The king said: "Why do you love the Habiru and hate the rulers?" But I do not love the Habiru! I am a faithful servant of the king! Behold, I have lost all the king's cities! There is no governor of the king who remains with me. May the king remember Urushalim, his city, for the king's land is being destroyed.

Quick Rundown:

Saturn is the seventh planet.

Saturn is the final planet.

The letter Z in Hebrew is Zayin, with the value 7.

Zayin/7 is the final letter.

Zayin carries the meaning and symbolism of a sickle.

Saturn carries a sickle; it is associated with harvest.

The Jews worship Saturn.

Lead is the metal of Saturn; it represents density, weight, inertia, matter in its most raw, heavy, and "dormant" state. It is the absence of spiritual light.

The donkey is associated with Saturn because it symbolically represents stubbornness, stupidity, and the lower nature.

The donkey was associated with the god of the Jews, who were accused of idolatry.

During Saturnalia, a donkey was associated with Saturn, symbolizing the inversion of order and the revelation of the stupidity behind rigid law.

The number 6 is the number of material creation (hexagon, cube, 6 days of creation in Genesis). The Demiurge creates the material world (6), but its archetypal principle is 7, the law, the structure, time, the fate that governs and imprisons this creation.

The 7 is the jailer, not the jail. The jail is the material world (6). The 7 is the law that sustains it.

The god of the Jews is legalistic, lol.

Also, Shabbat is literally the day of Saturn, lol, the seventh day.

The box on the head represents the submission of the intellect to Divine Law. On the Tree of Life, Saturn is Binah, the sphere that restricts and defines. Tefillin symbolizes that the human mind (chaotic) must be "framed" (placed in the cube/law) to serve God.

The image is a painting that depicts a scene of conflict. In the foreground, a muscular man with a beard and long hair is in the midst of a fierce battle. He is holding a sword in one hand and a shield in the other, and his expression is one of determination. The man is surrounded by other figures, some of whom are also engaged in combat. The background is filled with smoke and flames, suggesting a chaotic and intense atmosphere. The painting is rendered in a realistic style with a focus on the action and the intensity of the moment. There is a signature at the bottom right corner that reads "G.R.R. Martin," indicating the artist's name.

Jews still perform sacrifice to Azazel.

>Aaron shall offer the bull as a sin offering for himself, and shall make atonement for himself and for his house. He shall take the two goats and set them before the Lord at the entrance of the tent of meeting; and Aaron shall cast lots on the two goats, one lot for the Lord and the other lot for Azazel. Aaron shall present the goat on which the lot fell for the Lord, and offer it as a sin offering; but the goat on which the lot fell for Azazel shall be presented alive before the Lord to make atonement over it, that it may be sent away into the wilderness to Azazel. (Leviticus16:8)

"The Se'ir HaMishtalei'ach ceremony that is performed as part of the Yom Kippur Beit HaMikdash ritual appears primitive and brutal and even seems to run counter to basic Torah values. The notion of taking a goat and hurling it down a cliff, thereby achieving forgiveness for our sins, is difficult for us to accept."

'Azaz'el as being identical with 'Aziz(u) that the Hebrew name must necessarily mean "Strong (is) God (or: El)" or "God's (or: El's) strength" What the First Book of Enoch says about 'Azazel's nature or character is quite clear from ch. 86, 1, where Enoch describes his vision: "And I watched again with my eyes while I slept, and I saw the sky above, and lo, a star fell from the sky, and it rose and ate and grazed among these bulls" and v. 3 goes on: "And I had a vision again, and I looked at the sky, and lo, I saw many stars fall down and rush from the sky down to that first star". In ch. 87 four archangels are mentioned in the form of "white people" it becomes evident that 'Azazel in chs. 86-88 is a now fallen god of an astral character. And it is as obvious that behind the passages quoted are the Isaiah prophecy, ch. 14, 12 sqq., and the description of the scapegoat, Leviticus

And the mathematical method.

>There are several sources for the curvature of natural numbers to become either irrational or transcendental numbers like pi and e, or the inverse of the fine structure constant, 137. One of them is the Baal Mishnat Chasidim who explains that the number pi, which is the circumference of a circle whose diameter is 1, begins with the parameter of a hexagon. The hexagon is like the inside of a Magen David (Star of David). The hexagon has six sides, each of them equal to the radius of the circle. If the radius is  $1/2$ , the diameter is 1, and the parameter of the hexagon is  $6 \times 1/2$ , which is 3. That is the approximate value that the sages give for pi, 3. Then if the polygon becomes more sided, with 7, 8, etc. sides, to infinity, that infinitely approaches the exact number pi. Pi is the secret of progression from a six-sided polygon to an infinite polygon.

>This is a very beautiful phenomenon that is obviously connected to the secret of creation. The world was created in 6 days, which creates a hexagon. The secret of the 7th day, Shabbat, is the transcendental addition to the hexagon, to make it approach and become an infinite limit, pi.

The black cube is saturnine as is the demiurge.

>The Goat is Satanic because it's Saturnine, being the animal associated with Capricorn.

>The symbolism of Azazel, identified in Semitic traditions as the scapegoat and lord of the seirim, the goat-like spirits of the desert, points to an archetype of cosmic disintegration and separation from the principle. In his ambivalent function, he represents the point of the fall of the primordial light into matter, that is, the moment when the creative power, moving away from the center, becomes an inverted reflection, a "mirror of light" imprisoned in the density of manifestation. Mount Seir, the domain of Edom, symbolizes this limit of Creation, the desert where the Spirit is exiled and where the "fallen angel" is bound until the end of the cycle. The figure of Dushara, or Dusares, the black god of the Nabateans, associated with the cubic stone of Petra, is none other than the continuation of this cult to the Saturnine principle, the "Lord of the Limit" (Shara, of Mesopotamian origin), who imprisons the celestial power in a mineral and inert form. The black cube, a symbol of Saturn, is the emblem of coagulated time, of the terminal state of manifestation: within it, the spirit is solidified, the light becomes opaque, and space replaces the center. The rite of libation upon the stone thus represents the residual attempt to reconnect with the lost axis, the blood sacrifice seeking to reanimate what has been petrified.

The fall

>Having circled back and forth with the identity of Lucifer, let's get down to the most controversial, and most quoted text regarding one of the ugaritic dioscuri, Shahr. In this condemnatory prophecy, concerning the King of Babylon, is now told that he shall be thrown down from his present position as ruler. The text in Isaiah 14, 12-15, is as follows:

12. "How you are fallen from Heaven, o, Helel ben Shahr!

How you are cut down to the ground, you who plundering laid the nations low!

13. You said in your heart: "I will ascend to Heaven, I will raise my throne above the stars of El, I will sit on the Mount of Assembly, On the Heights of Saphon.

14. I will ascend to the ridges of the clouds, I will make myself like the Most High ('Elyon)!"

15. Indeed, you are brought down to the Realm of Death (She'ol), to the depths of the Pit".

>The quoted essay spend some time in showing how the crucial part, that is the name

Helel ben Shahar, can be translated simply as “Shahar, the Luminous one”. Pointing clearly at the ugaritic god, which appears other time in the bible.

So the text is echoing an attempt of an astral god of lower rank to take the throne of Ba'al, something we already found: the god Athtar attempts to gain Ba'al throne and royal power after his death, but he has to resign and renounce his plan: “his feet do not reach the footstool, his head does not reach the top (of the seat)”, after which he pronounces: “I will not be king on the heights of Saphon! Thereupon 'Athtar descends from the seat of the mighty Ba'al, and rules over the earth, god of it all”.

“And I saw one of the four (archangels) who had come out first, and he took the first star that had fallen from the sky and bound it hand and foot and threw it into an abyss...”.

The alien Sauron cut and bound the Tree.

Mordor

>So, let's get down to one of the two main fallen angels, Azazel/Asael, or, as the author of the essay try to reconstruct before its distortion, Azzez'el, “God (or: El) gives strength”, pointing at Azizos, one of the two “strong gods” behind the morning star. Another hint is found in the scapegoat ritual, where one of the two goat is sent in the desert, for Azael, to carry the sins of the people. The desert, or steppe, that “mythical place” that was one of the topical place of the two gods Arsu/Azizos. In fact, in the steppe/desert, sacrifices are offered after the birth of the two “gracious and beautiful” gods, where they live, hunt and survive, consequently getting there their food too. The steppe here is not necessarily intended in a geographical perspective, but as a mythical landscape, that is connected, or part of the netherworld, that same place where Azazel is bound. “And the Lord said then to Rafa'el: “Bind 'Azazel's hand and foot and throw him into darkness, and open the wilderness/desert which is in Duda'el and throw him out there”.

Who is Luke Skywalker's sister

>This is the name of the common Semitic deity, known in north Syria and in Mesopotamia, that acted as the god of the morning and evening star. And it represented both a “masculine” and “feminine” aspect. An example is how in Sumerian and Akkadian religion, the Venus star is called Dilbat, the masculine morning star, and Ishtar, the feminine evening star. Not always was a distinctive name given, as in Ugarit, where the god 'Athtar appear side by side with the goddess 'Athtar.

>In other semitic cultures, like the south arabian, he is known exclusively in the masculine form as 'Athtar. In this area, one of his names is 'Athtar Sharqân, "The 'Athtar of the East", pointing to him being a god of sunrise. The verbshrqbeside meaning "to rise" also means "to cleave, divide into two", applied probably as the one who separate the light from dark. An epithet that we find in the nabataean area for Dushares, as "the one who separates day from night". In another witnesses, we find the epithetghrhn, "The Western One, the West", applied to this 'Athtar Sharqân, we have the representation of a deity who mark the two opposite stage of Venus, that of the Phosphoros and Hesperos. This astral function represents the doubleness that in the northern semitic cultures is represented either through hermaphroditism or through the division in two entities.

The image depicts a fantastical landscape with a central focus on a tall, dark tower that resembles a lighthouse. The tower is situated on a rocky outcropping with a narrow pathway leading up to it. The tower is illuminated by a bright orange light, which casts an eerie glow on the surrounding area. The sky is filled with dark clouds, and the ground is covered in dark, rocky terrain. In the background, a large, dark mountain with a glowing red lava flow on its peak is visible. The overall atmosphere of the image is dramatic and ominous, with a sense of impending doom. There are no discernible texts or human figures in the image. The style of the image is realistic with a touch of fantasy, and it is rendered in a dark, moody color palette.

The image is a digital photograph that depicts a forest scene with a focus on the trees and the ground. The trees are densely packed, with a mix of green and brown hues, suggesting a mature forest. The forest floor is covered with fallen leaves and small twigs, indicating a natural, undisturbed environment.

In the foreground, there is a quote in white text that reads, "There is an old deep magic in these woods which has seeped into my bones." The text is centered and appears to be a quote from a source not fully visible in the image. The quote suggests a connection to the forest's mystical or ancient energy, which has been imprinted on the individual's being.

The overall style of the image is a blend of natural elements and text, creating a serene and contemplative atmosphere. The use of color and lighting contributes to the forest's mood, with the green of the trees and the blue of the sky creating a sense of tranquility. The image does not contain any discernible people or other objects, focusing solely on the natural landscape.

The illustration depicts a 3D model of the Nimrod's Temple VI of Enki, which is a large, rectangular building with a flat roof. The temple is surrounded by a courtyard with a raised platform in the center. The platform is surrounded by a wall with a series of steps leading up to it.

The illustration includes a diagram with arrows pointing to various parts of the temple, such as the fish burn offering altar, the raised platform for idol of Enki, and the sealed luca. There is also a scale on the bottom right corner of the image indicating the size of the temple in meters.

The image is a digital creation, likely used for educational or informational purposes, and it is watermarked with the text "BibleGenius.com" and "www.bible.ca/nimrod". The style of the image is informative and designed to provide a clear and detailed representation of the Nimrod's Temple VI of Enki, with a focus on the architectural and historical context of the structure.

The image is a painting that depicts a fantastical cityscape with a large, imposing structure at its center. This structure is a complex of buildings with a central tower that reaches towards the sky. The architecture is ornate and detailed, with intricate carvings and sculptures adorning the facades. The colors used in the painting are predominantly earth tones, with the exception of the central tower which is rendered in a lighter, more golden hue.

In the foreground, there is a bustling scene with people and animals, suggesting a lively urban environment. The people are dressed in various styles of clothing, and some are carrying objects, possibly goods or tools, which are not clearly visible. The animals, which include horses and what appears to be a large, muscular creature, add to the dynamic nature of the scene.

The sky above the city is filled with clouds, and the overall atmosphere of the painting is one of a cloudy day, with the city bathed in a soft, diffused light. The painting is executed in a realistic style, with meticulous attention to detail in the architecture and the people, as well as the natural elements like the clouds and the sky. The overall composition and the use of color and light create a sense of depth and perspective, drawing the viewer into the scene.

Keep coming back to Nimrod, has the donkey imagery and the Cushite serpent lineage, maybe a clone of Lucifer/Dushara, makes me think of recent rumours of same.

“In every ancient culture, we find the horn symbol used to deify rulers and monarchs. The founder of Babylon, Pelus, or sometimes referred to as Belus, or Pel, or Bel, or even Baal, “the confounder of language”, and the “scatterer abroad” who was no other than Cush, the father of Nimrod, was actually deified and given a crown of Horns. His son, Nimrod, also known as Queen Shamiram’s husband, and later is reincarnated as Ninos, sometimes referred to as Tammuz, was said to have been the actual father of the Gods, and we see him as being the first of deified mortals wearing the horned crown reserved for rulers of divine nature...”

>the United States invaded Iraq to locate the tomb of Nimrod, extract his remains, and clone the ancient tyrant to serve as the Antichrist in the final war of Gog and Magog.

>According to those tracking this theory, the entire campaign (shock, awe, catastrophic chaos included) was the most expensive, bloody archaeological dig in human history. Forget geopolitics. We’re talking about prophecy, cloning, and a secret society mandate to resurrect the very first tyrant of mankind: Nimrod, the Warmaster of Babylon.

>In the School of Rabbi Shilait was taught that they built the tower with the intention of piercing the heavens with axes to drain all the water held therein, making it impossible for G-d to bring another flood, should they vex Him again. (Perhaps what's meant by this is that they had embraced their understanding of science and its workings to the extent that they felt they were now able to spar with G-d on His turf—the heavens.)

Note the reference to language/source code. Original Earth/Inner Earth bore the snakes curse.

>Where does the snake’s nakedness/cunning come from? The Hizkuni (commentary of 13thc., French exegete, R. Hezekiah ben Manoah) suggests that the snake had already eaten of the tree – had gained “cunning/nakedness” and seduced Eve into eating of the fruit for want of company. The snake is the first to be aware of its own nudity, the first to “cover up” through the manipulation of language, and the first to be physically stripped of its outer layer. According to midrash (PRE 14), God’s curse not only strips the snake of its limbs but of its skin as well.

>Rabbi Ilai says: “The Holy One, blessed be He, took the skin which the snake sloughed off and made it into garments of skins and clothed them.”

>Rabbi Yehuda said: The coats which the Holy One, blessed be He, made for Adam and his wife, were with Noah in the ark, and when they went forth from the ark, Ham, the son of Noah, brought them forth with him, and gave them as an inheritance to Nimrod. When he put them on, all beasts, animals, and birds, when they saw the coats, came and prostrated themselves before him. The sons of men thought that this (was due) to the power of his might; therefore they made him king over themselves, as it is said, “Like Nimrod, a mighty hunter before the LORD” (Gen. 10:9).

The book is flanked by two statues, one on each side, both of which appear to be ancient, with detailed carvings and a sense of age. The statues are positioned in a way that suggests they are guarding the book.

The temple or palace itself is constructed of stone, with a sense of antiquity and grandeur. The floor is made of large, flat stones, and the walls are adorned with columns and decorative carvings, adding to the overall ancient aesthetic.

Above, the sky is filled with dramatic clouds, and lightning can be seen striking the sky, creating a sense of power and drama. The lighting in the image is dramatic, with a focus on the book and the statues, and the rest of the image is in a softer, more subdued light. There are no discernible texts or inscriptions on the book or in the surrounding area.

The overall color palette of the image is dark, with a predominance of browns and grays, which contributes to the ancient and mysterious atmosphere of the scene. The image does not contain any people or modern elements, suggesting a setting that is either ancient or inspired by ancient cultures.

Tablet of Destinies as an AI black cube stolen by Lucifer/Dushara/yhwh, probability/timeline precognitive device (destinies). Shara took it and flew off on the anzu bird to Mt.Seir in Edom.

>The Tablet of Destinies was believed to be crafted by the hands of Enlil, the supreme god of the Mesopotamian pantheon. This divine artifact contained the inscribed destinies of every living being, from the humblest peasant to the most powerful king. The tablets were said to be inscribed with intricate symbols and cuneiform script, holding the secrets of each individual's life, their successes and failures, their joys and sorrows.

>The power of the Tablet of Destinies was not simply confined to foretelling the future. It was believed that the tablets held the very power to shape events and alter the course of lives. The gods, through their chosen representatives, could influence the fate of individuals, nations, and even the entire world. This belief instilled a sense of awe and reverence towards the divine, as well as a deep-seated fear of the potential consequences of defying the will of the gods.

A number of angels having remained neutral and inactive during the battle of Lucifer and the rebel angels against God and the faithful heavenly hosts, after Lucifer's fall they were condemned by God to support this stone, which had dropped from Lucifer's crown, hovering between Heaven and Earth till the hour of redemption of sinful mankind. Then they brought it to Earth."

>Master Aliboron

The etymology of the word *aliboron* is uncertain. In the 15th century, the expression *maistre Aliborum* referred to a person skilled in all sorts of things ("master of alibis"). Then, in the following century, the expression evolved to designate someone who believes they know or are clever when they are actually ignorant or foolish, an expression then popularized by La Fontaine's donkey. It probably comes from the black hellebore, a plant then considered a universal remedy and often associated with the word *maistre* to designate a doctor, and then by extension to learned or skilled men. Its meaning then evolved to designate those who meddle in everything but do nothing useful (hence, derisively, the ironic title *maistre Aliboron* then applied to doctors, by association with the donkey). Another hypothesis is a misinterpretation by the Irishman John Scotus Eriugena, who in the 9th century, in his commentary on Martianus Capella, erroneously interpreted the word elleboro, which designated the plant, as the name of a philosopher of the same sect as Carneades. A third hypothesis makes the word a transposition of the name of the Persian philosopher and scholar Al-Biruni. But the last two hypotheses do not explain the semantic shift from philosopher to foolish character.

>The Feast of the Ass was ostensibly commemorating the role of donkeys in the Flight into Egypt, observed mainly in France. Some accounts of the Christian version of the festival say that a pregnant woman from a village would ride a donkey to a local church. In Beauvais, each operation of the mass, instead of saying "Amen" the congregation would bray "Y-a" There the donkey would stand near the altar during the saying of the mass. Attention to this connection was drawn by Carl Jung, "On the Psychology of the Trickster-Figure" in The archetypes and the collective unconscious (pp. 257–259) Jung mentions "a codex dating apparently from the 11th century", according to which "At the end of the mass, instead of the words 'Ite missa est,' the priest would bray three times. Jung also cites the glossarium of Du Cange for evidence of the medieval custom.

>Cervulus or Cervula is the name of a Roman festival celebrated on the kalends of January (1 January). According to Chambers (1864), remnants seem to have been incorporated into a medieval Christian Feast of the Ass, an opinion endorsed by Carl Jung.

One of the most arcane of human traditions suggests that the humanity of our Adam was not the earth's first human race. Some very advanced alchemists have hinted at a range of previous humanities in excess of thirty. If this is the true but wholly unsuspected history of our planet, much knowledge may have been selectively accumulated in a span of existence which imagination is inadequate even to visualize. At each successive apocalypse, an ark would go out, encapsulating not only the germ plasm necessary to found the next humanity but with it also, some vehicle, some psychological micro-dot, containing the totality of accumulated knowledge. On this assumption the technique of alchemy would have reached us as a transmission from ancestors whose existence we do not even suspect.

Cabala vs Kabbalah

Cabala is Fulcanelli's term for a special use of language, drawing on phonetic similarities and other symbolic techniques for expanding the expressive reach of words. This is related to the Green Language or Language of the Birds of the alchemists.

Kabbalah is the Hebrew body of mystical tradition which contains techniques such as gematria, notariqon and temura, drawing on numeric equivalences of letters, numerology, permutations of letters, forming new texts by picking first letters of words and other such text manipulation. The Tree of Life and its sefirath are also part of this tradition. Kabbalah is most often applied to the Hebrew text of the Torah.

>After a fashion, both are techniques for deriving additional meaning from text. However, practicing each draws on a radically different faculty of the mind. Kabbalah is mechanical and rigidly formal, whereas cabala is unpredictable, creative, rich in texture of symbolic meaning. In Gurdjieff's terminology, Kabbalah can be practiced by the formatory apparatus, whereas cabala requires the interplay of abstract thought and visual, auditory and emotional functions. Fulcanelli writes that phonetic cabala is the key to understanding alchemical texts and symbols. Cabala combined with study of word roots configures the mind so as to have a richer set of associations to draw from and expands the semantic space open for contemplation. Ultimately, this expansion of the faculty of language can reverse the 'babel' effect of confusion of tongues by connecting to a level of thought from which individual languages are only partial projections.

>In contrast with this, Kabbalah occupies one with tedious calculations which can just as easily be performed by computer. This has indeed been done, with the result of finding all kinds of 'hidden content' from the Bible, as well as from any other large body of text. The findings seem to be artifacts of probability and involve no particular conscious work.

>People think that such things are merely a play on words. I agree. The important thing is that such word-play should guide our faith towards certainty, towards positive and scientific truth, which is the key to the religious mystery, and should not leave us wandering in the capricious maze of our imagination.

>We do not invent anything, we do not create anything. All is in everything. Our microcosm is only an infinitesimal, animated, thinking and more or less imperfect particle of the macrocosm. What we believe we have ourselves discovered by an effort of our intelligence, exists already elsewhere. Faith gives us a presentiment of what this is. Revelation gives us absolute proof.

We are already performing alchemy by investigating and attempting to decipher phenomenal metamotives. When we investigate patterns, connections, inheritances, symbolisms, we are transmuting. Many complain about a lack of formalization, but I believe that amidst this confusion, the truth emerges purer, within our minds. May we continue to assemble the puzzle.

Enlil is closer to the archetype of the resentful and vengeful YHWH.

Enki is closer to the Promethean and Luciferian archetype of the serpent.

I separate these two when I try to reconstruct what may have been two main "factions" of these euhemerized metaanthropes, Asuras and Devas, Aesir and Vanir...

One side favorable and another that saw us as slaves.

No (ancestors), more respect and honour, and yes (God). It's the definitions of pray and God that people get lost on, and which we're working on somewhat sorting out here, at least within the Aryan tradition. That's the short answer, wrote a long one I might as well post as well.

Been trying to separate out "beings" and look for pure forms (truth, love etc), could be called prayer and worship.

To meditate on the divine attributes of the ineffable Absolute with the aim of internalized understanding or even realization as to their nature via resonance (awakening) certainly. But to differentiate this from the solar and lunar material archetypes (corrupted by alien Elohim occupying the nodes) in order to avoid being harvested for loosh.

To seek the black sun behind the sun.

>There is no Sophia, BTW. There are no female aeons; the beauty and grace of "women" in our world come from aspects of the divine Nous that are literally grace and beauty, and they externalize this because they are lunar. The fall of the demiurge is a matter of autonomy; unfortunately, otherness necessarily carries this monkey's paw.

The ancestors are a different story, wouldn't pray to them either as they are still beings, but from before the fall, maybe ask for help if really needed, in a way they are us and already know. More a case of honour and respect but not worship. Others may differ here, but contact seems to operate through sync and inspiration which leads to understanding similar to the pure archetypes. That said they can and do help, across space and time, and through the dimensional gate from home.

Studying alchemy again since red mercury posts, the situation here has been literally fiery so water came up as balance. Basic principle in joining the two at the points to make the athanor and alembic, to later (along with the actions of the other elements and secret ingredient) merge and form the merkaba or torus. Bringing the heavenly fire to Earth, and water from seas above, aetheric realm, a reversal similar to earlier discussions. Anyway pretty basic compared to the depth of the texts and processes you refer to with cabala, but a good starting point.

>You can Burn, you can Drown, or you can Make Steam

>We are talking about joining two opposites, about creating oneness again from a duality. And as you can see from this old 18th century painting of the Alchemist at work in his studio creating oneness from a duality is not possible in the physical world, even though many people tried very hard to achieve this goal, they either gave up, or died, in a form of eccentric madness, or they eventually discovered that they needed to project themselves above the physical. Into the dimension above this physical reality, the spirit realm, known to Alchemy as the Etheric or Ether Realm, the Seas Above.

>In fact, the alchemical fire, as a spark, must be transported by a vehicle that alchemists describe as watery. To eventually form an "igneous vapor".

Domdaniel

>That Hephaestus' laboratory is in the depths of the sea is even easier to understand for an alchemist: Mercurial fire is water, par excellence (it is, in fact, called "our water"). In Theurgy, after all, fire is information introduced into movement.

>Greek mythology tells us about Hephaestus – a deity connected with the alchemical furnaces – whose main task is to bring the weak “fire” of Zeus to earth. Just as it was the task of Vesta/Hestia to bring the weak “fire” of Hera, Zeus’ sister/spouse, to earth.

Was thinking I messed up the recipe, before the oven is made the egg has to be cracked, but this was already mentioned.

>Whoever wants to describe and understand something living,

>First seeks to drive out the spirit.

>Then he has, mar, the parts in his hand,

>Unfortunately, only the spiritual bond is missing.

"... the stone animal, vegetable, and mynerall, the which is no stone, neither hath the nature of a stone ... Y wolle name hym by his propre name, as the common peple calleth it, that is to sey, the terme of an egge, that is to sey, the philosophers' egge."

Guess driving out the spirit might be this one, the demiurge, to return to the primordial state before creation, the Prima Materia.

"And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters"

>In alchemy the egg stands for the chaos apprehended by the artifex, the prima materia containing the captive world-soul. Out of the egg—symbolized by the round cooking vessel—will rise the eagle or phoenix, the liberated soul, which is ultimately identical with the Anthropos who was imprisoned in the embrace of Physis.

unbelievable how close it is to the germanic myth

>V. Gangleri asked: "How were things wrought, ere the races were and the tribes of men increased?" Then said Hárr: "The streams called Ice-waves, those which were so long come from the fountain-heads that the yeasty venom upon them had hardened like the slag that runs out of the fire,--these then became ice; and when the ice halted and ceased to run, then it froze over above. But the drizzling rain that rose from the venom congealed to rime, and the rime increased, frost over frost, each over the other, even into Ginnungagap, the Yawning Void." Then spake Jafnhárr: "Ginnungagap, which faced toward the northern quarter, became filled with heaviness, and masses of ice and rime, and from within, drizzling rain and gusts; but the southern part of the Yawning Void was lighted by those sparks and glowing masses which flew out of Múspellheim." And Thríði said: "Just as cold arose out of Niflheim, and all terrible things, so also all that looked toward Múspellheim became hot and glowing; but Ginnungagap was as mild as windless air, and when the breath of heat met the rime, so that it melted and dripped, life was quickened from the yeast-drops, by the power of that which sent the heat, and became a man's form. >When one operates from above the lower ego, there is no "evil" only creation and destruction; day and night, light and dark.

Ultimately yes, that's only outside the distortion though, the simulation, which we are not, neither are the ancestor gods/higher selves that reflect us, all are within the dream of the demiurge and subject to karmic systems. Reason enough not to be evil for those familiar with the pit, but still a choice, and a hard one sometimes as most of us are impure in some way.

There is certainly evil here.

Even in the pleroma I'd surmise it was excessive destruction that led it to have this nightmare, wasn't happy thoughts, must have been a consequence of something fucked up.

So evil is a dream of the demiurge and has no concrete existence, but it ends up in this shitshow, why it all comes down to choice, nightmare or dream something good, something beautiful. I choose the latter. Not to say darkness and destruction have no place, but evil is a waste of space, an unnatural distortion, who needs it?

Might as well leave and trash the place.

>To the close dreamers, don't forget the Amaranth. There *is* one step beyond CHIM, Likely the same. A lot talk about the ark being a charging device, to the point of people making working reconstructions based on Leyden jars, along with biblical accounts of its supernatural powers. Figure it powered the Tablet, which was the actual device. The tech seemed to be failing at this stage, degenerating into a cargo cult, Tefillin etc, since then they have been trying to fix the thing.

>But the Hebrew Talmud offers a very different imagery. The Mosaic Tablets were instead described to be not two but one, a single double-sided stone inscribed on both sides and said to be made of "sapphire" or some other "gemstone" or jewel. It was recorded to have measured "not more than six hands in length and as much in width"—about two feet by two feet—and "transparent" yet remarkably heavy. In modern terms, what was interpreted to be “script” may have actually been some form of printed circuitry purposely placed on the gem surfaces that allowed the device to have a wide range of functions. Ancient mysteries researcher-author Frank Joseph believes the Ark’s “sapphire” was “a specimen of incomprehensibly sophisticated technology crafted thousands of years ago.” He wrote further:

>Are today's Jews descendants of a worldwide caste, namely the humans set apart, given smartphone implants connected to AI, and trained to manage the others after the Flood?

>Were the years of wandering in the desert really the story of a leftover pre-Flood Black Cube kidnapping and chipping a group of people, then showing them how to (re)implement a worldwide technocratic government in the knowledge that one day, hundreds or thousands of years in the future, a sufficient level of infrastructure would be attained for the Black Cube to return?

The image depicts a fantastical scene set in a dimly lit room with a dark, moody atmosphere. Dominating the center of the room is a large, glowing green crystal ball with a complex, intricate pattern of lines and shapes radiating outward. The crystal ball is surrounded by various objects that suggest a magical or mystical theme.

To the left of the crystal ball, there are several bottles with labels that are not clearly readable. On the right side of the crystal ball, there are several books, some of which are open, and a few other objects that are not distinctly identifiable.

The room is filled with an array of candles, some of which are lit, casting a soft glow on the surroundings. The walls of the room are adorned with shelves filled with books and other items, creating a sense of a well-stocked library or a collection of magical artifacts. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of digital art or fantasy illustrations, with a focus on the interplay of light and shadow, and the use of color to create a sense of depth and atmosphere. The image does not contain any discernible text.

Went down the etymology rabbit hole searching for the green language of the alchemists.

>Whoever wants to describe and understand something living,

>First seeks to drive out the spirit.

>Then he has, mar, the parts in his hand,

>Unfortunately, only the spiritual bond is missing.

Figured before the spirit to drive out of the philosophical egg was yhwh/demiurge, the spirit who separated the waters in the beginning, to return it to Prima Materia, the primordial state. Now mar seems an odd word choice, and I know it has another meaning, likely the author of the text did too. Still found something surprising further down the dive.

Circles within circles, like I've been here before.

Mar:

>To inflict damage, especially disfiguring damage, on.
>impair the soundness, perfection, or integrity of; spoil.
>To deface or disfigure; injure by cutting, breaking, abrading, crushing, etc.; impair in form or substance

"Middle Englishmerren"to deface, disfigure; impair in form or substance" (early 13c.), from Old Englishmerran(Anglian),mierran(West Saxon) "to waste, spoil," from Proto-Germanic*marzjan(source also of Old Frisianmeria, Old High Germanmarren"to hinder, obstruct," Gothicmarzjan"to hinder, offend"), from PIE root*mers-"to trouble, confuse" (source also of Sanskritmrsyate"forgets, neglects," Lithuanianmiršti"to forget")."

Mar also a title meaning Lord and Mara Lady, originally used for gods, likely originally from Mari the Basque mother goddess, their only deity, from before the Indo-European invasion when Europe was matriarchal, back to the time of Atlantis. The tradition eventually led to Christitian Mary mother of god, and John Martinus the son of Jesus and Mary Magdelene.

>The deities who appear on the papyrus are of great variety as well, with the most prominent being a divine pair called Mar (mār, "Lord") and Marah (mār(')ā, "Lady"). While Marah is expressly an epithet for Nanay or Nanaya, the identification of Mar in the papyrus is more difficult. It is possible that "Mar" is a theonym by analogy with deities from the Roman and Parthian periods who are called Marnā or Māran, "our Lord," such as Marnas of Gaza described by Porphyry, or Māran of Hatra, who belongs to a divine triad with his spouse Mārtan "our Lady," and a son Barmārēn "Son of our Lord." On the divine triad Māran, Mārtan, and Barmārēn in Parthian Hatra While Māran is probably the sun-god, the other two in the triad are hard to identify; but see ibid. for the suggestion that Mārtan "our Lady," is Nanaya.

>Mar, often perceived as a succinct and powerful name, can mean different things in various cultures. The name has its roots in Greek and Hebrew traditions, with meanings ranging from "sea" to "bitter" depending on its context. In Greek, it can connect to names like "Maria," which relates to the sea, while in Hebrew, "Mar" signifies "bitter" derived from "Mara." The name evokes images of deep waters and emotional depths.

"Aramaic noun meaning "lord." Daniel addresses the king as "Mari" (= "my lord"; Dan. iv. 16 [A. V. 19]; comp. Hebr. "Adoni," used in speaking to the king). In the Palestinian schools "Mari" and "Rabbi" were customarily employed in addressing the sages. It is said of King Jehoshaphat that on seeing a scholar he rose from his throne, and saluted him with the words, "Abi, abi; rabbi, rabbi; mari, mari" (Ket. 103b; Mak. 24a). Jesus was addressed by his disciples both as "Mari" and as "Rabbi"

The bird is facing to the right and appears to be in a state of distress or distressful expression. The skull is positioned on the left side of the image, with the bird's head resting on it. The bird's beak is open, and its eyes are wide open, suggesting a state of panic or fear.

>In the early Christian church, particularly in the Eastern traditions, the use of "Mar" as a title became prevalent. It was used to denote bishops, saints, and other revered figures. This practice highlights the cultural exchange and linguistic influences in the regions where Aramaic and Syriac were spoken.

Again used as a word for yhwh.

"The variant Marya or Moryo (Syriac: ܡܪܝܐ, Māryā) is the original form of Mara/Moro, but only used in reference to God in the circle of Syriac Christianity. This word is used in the Peshitta Old Testament to render the Tetragrammaton."

>In Hebrew, the name "Mara" (מָרָא) translates to "bitter." This name first appears in the Book of Ruth, where Naomi, a Hebrew woman, adopts the name Mara following the death of her husband and sons. Naomi expresses her grief and sense of loss by stating, "Call me no longer Naomi, call me Mara, for the Almighty has dealt very bitterly with me"

>Additionally, the name Mara is linked to another biblical event in Exodus 15:23–25, where the Israelites encounter bitter waters at a place called Marah.

Which forms a perfect circle, goes back to the division of the waters,

"Apsû, the first one, their begetter, And the creator Tīāmat, she who bore them all; They had mingled their waters together."

Tiamat is the bitter waters, the bitter sea, the chaotic waters of death which were separated from the Apsu, fresh waters.

In the top left corner, there is a close-up of a digital astronomical instrument, possibly a telescope or a similar device, with a focus on the eyepiece and the telescope body. The instrument appears to be a part of a larger astronomical setup, as suggested by the surrounding text that reads "These patterns look familiar. Ah, yes, the 1850s and an early telescope."

The top right corner features a diagram with a circular structure at the center, surrounded by lines and arrows, which could represent a model of a celestial object or a concept related to the universe. The diagram includes various celestial bodies and lines that seem to indicate their motion or relationship to each other.

The bottom left column contains three images. The first image is a close-up of a black hole, with a white outline and a black center, which is a common depiction of a black hole. The second image is a close-up of a blue planet with a white outline and a black center, which could represent a planet in our solar system. ## >The Origin of Existence and the Cosmic Egg

"In the beginning, before time and being, there was primordial potentiality. From that potentiality, in the dimension of open and waiting space, thanks to the power of the Immortal, the air element and the winds emerged. The movement of the winds produced a vortex of light that whirled vigorously. The energy of the winds discharged heat, and the fire element formed.

From the cold vapor of the wind and the burgeoning heat of the fire element, water formed as dew and rime (frost on cold objects created by the rapidfreezingof watervaporin clouds and fog). Minute particles of matter condensed on those waters, creating the earth element. Those particles, shaken and blended by the wind whirling swiftly in space, formed the earth and its mountains.

From the interaction of the essences of the five basic elements—space, air, fire, water, earth—two cosmic eggs came into being, an egg of light and an egg of darkness.

From the power of the Infinite Non-Being, the Cosmic Egg of Darkness formed, with three corners, the size of a three-year-old bull.

The Luminous Egg hatched by the force of its own light, and from the clear light that spread in space were born the numerous deities, beings of light who took on the task of protecting virtuous actions. From the Luminous Egg emerged the Ancestor and Ancestress of the human race, and the Deities who took on the task of sustaining compassion and virtue.

The black egg hatched in the dimension of black darkness, and from the black light that was emitted upwards were born darkness, obfuscation and obscuration. From the rays that spread falling downwards were born madness, obfuscation and obscuration. From the inner essence of the egg was born a man of black light with his hair tied in three big plaits. Medbum Nagpo gave him the name Munpa Serden (Radiant Black Darkness). He is a king .who likes to annihilate and to empty, to interrupt and to destroy.

In that way, good and evil were born, the earth and all of its beings were created, bringing order to the chaos of unformed potentiality."

This realm was called Patala by the Vedics, home of the serpent people, there was wars fought with them, the stories perhaps stemming from the before times, perhaps not.

"Patala(lit. that which is below the feet), in Hindu mythology is a subterranean underworld or chthonic realm located under the earthly dimension and ruled by the Nagas."

These Naga are to be differentiated from the water, and other elemental, forms that subsist in the aetheral realm, the keepers. These things have material substance.

>Pataala-Loka: The lowest territory of the materialistic universe is called Patala or Nagaloka. Vasuki is the ruler of this Naga region. Here live quite a lot of Nagas whose hoods are decorated with a jewel and thus enlighten this realm with the lights reflected from the jewels. Vedic mythology, Pataala-Loka also seems to be very much a real place that has been stylized in various ways- located under the sea, located beneath the earth like so many stories we have "when the sun sets in the earth, it rises in Pataala"

"Beneath the surface of the Earth, hidden away from the light of the sun, lies a labyrinthine world of shadows, serpents, and untold secrets—the Seven Underworlds of Hindu cosmology. Known as the Sapta Patala"

The home of the Naga is generally considered to be Inner Earth.

>Patala is believed by millions of Hindus to this day to have an entrance in the Well of Sheshna in Benares. According to herpetologist and author Sherman A. Minton in his book Venomous Reptiles, this entrance is very real, having 40 steps which descend into a circular depression and then terminate at a closed stone door covered in bas-relief cobras.

>Traditional entrance to the underworld of Patalas, which is divided into 7 realms: Rasatala, Mahatala, Alala, Sutala, Vitala, Talatala, & Patala. Some legends say that it is the abode of reptilian humanoids, although human "appearing" beings have also traditionally been encountered within Patalas. King Bhunandana allegedly entered this domain of "forbidden pleasures" via a portal in the peak of Pradyumna [or Hill of Sarika]. The underground journey to Patalas took 5 days and nights. Upon arriving, the king and his knights encountered an underground plain with trees from which hung human corpses, and also large vats of liquid in which human flesh and blood was mixed. A "woman" appeared and offered the king a cup of the "vile" liquid, stating that unless he drank it he would not prosper. He took the cup and threw its substance in disgust at the feet of the so-called "goddess", who in anger told him to take his men and leave that realm, and King Bhunandana obliged. The capital city of Patalas [also known among Hindus as Nagaloka or Snakeworld] is Bhoga-vita.

The sky above is filled with dark clouds, and the sun is setting or rising, casting a warm, golden glow over the scene. In the distance, there is a barren landscape with rocky outcrops and a few scattered structures, possibly ruins or abandoned buildings. The overall mood of the image is one of desolation and the passage of time. There are no texts or discernible human figures in the image.

Stranger Things, been watching this again and for all the nightmare there is a path here, through the hell of the inversion.

>After reading about the Vale of Shadows —a “dark reflection or echo of our world” —the boys determine that the Upside Down must be a dimension that’s like Hawkins but darker.

>In Season 1, the Upside Down is revealed to be a parallel version of Hawkins, inundated with shadows, living vines that feed on anyone in their path, terrifying monsters such as the Demogorgons, and ashlike particles called Upside Down spores. This alternate world can be accessed through portals, or gates, which are hidden throughout the town.

>The Upside Down is frozen in time at the moment Eleven accidentally created it.

Nancy discovered that in Stranger Things 4, without knowing how or why this lack of time exists. The Upside Down is also a mixture of the two worlds it connects on Stranger Things, our reality and the Abyss. Vecna—along with Demogorgons, the Mind Flayer, demodogs, demobats, and vines—have used the Upside Down as a bridge to travel from the Abyss to the real world on Stranger Things

>Living up to its name, the Abyss isn't exactly a tourist destination. The alternate dimension features a stormy yellow sky over a jarring terrain of steep canyons and sharp rocks jutting out at odd angles. In this unfriendly world, Holly (Nell Fisher) and the other children Vecna has kidnapped are entombed in the spires of a grotesque fixture known as the Pain Tree.

The image is a digital illustration featuring a green lion with a sun-like face on its head. The lion is depicted in a seated position, with its body facing the viewer and its head turned to the right. The lion's mane is depicted in a flowing, wavy manner, and its tail is curled around its body. The lion's eyes are closed, and its mouth is slightly open, giving the impression of a gentle slumber.

Above the lion, there is a banner with a scroll-like design. The scroll is rolled up and has a blue background with a white border. The text on the scroll is not clearly legible due to the image resolution and angle.

The background of the image is plain white, which contrasts with the green of the lion and the blue of the scroll. The overall style of the image is reminiscent of medieval or Renaissance art, with its use of color, texture, and the depiction of animals.

The ninth lion eats the sun.

>But the true exit, according to the text's radical cosmology, lies in rejecting the entire artificial sky and seeking the origin that is prior and external to it.

The difference between a Kuala Siddha (Chim, free will) and the truly radical backwards path through the black sun Serrano and others described but could not follow (Amaranth), the quest to escape the nightmare cycle, end or rectify it, and find a new beginning.

>the images you give birth to in your dream— stolen (?) from first dreamer— wakes up. Wails knowing free will. And begins to dream in the same way

>In our framework, the number 9 is the number of completion before the return to the 1 (The Source). By being the "Ninth Divine," Talos represents the final step of the Forge.

>The Eight are the planetary managers (The Seven + the Earth/Moon system).

>The Ninth is the human who has mastered all eight and added the One Drop of Divine Will to become a New Source.

>It is the refusal to be a "part" of the Eight, and the insistence on being the Ninth.

"... if he has found the "lost Master-word" or the "unspeakable Name of God," and with it has won the tenth plane, then the compulsion of rebirth into human life ceases for him, since he already belongs to the next higher, noumenal plane, from which he can only voluntarily, with a special self-chosen mission, reincarnate into the human world again."

"The Black Work

Covered in mud,

Born again — past the flood.

My guide told me to die,

Find the cord that connects us to time.

Deeper and deeper into the mud,

Vision black, but I start to see God.

A tree, a rock, all my past lives

Hung Holm the tree, crying out, writhing in the hold of time.

They yell out to me, "Remember, remember her!"

The oldest — a king long withered away —

Granted me truth, saying words without a mouth.

My cord is connected to these dead men, but it continues beyond me.

We're a dynasty, I understand now, on a mission to conquer time.

I began to hear her song as I'm pulled back.

As the light envelops me, my master bears my face."

>The earliest documented appearances of Saturnian cubic symbolism emerge from the Mesopotamian astronomical-religious complex, where Saturn (Ninurta/Kronos) was associated with the establishment of boundaries and the transmission of technological knowledge. The cuneiform tablet series "MUL.APIN" explicitly connects Saturn's influence to what the Babylonians termed ME—the divine principles governing technological and cultural advancement. This ancient association between Saturn and technical knowledge transmission presents an intriguing precedent for contemporary artificial intelligence development paradigms.

>At the end of the cycle, those who walk into the Golden Age will build the kingdoms and establish everything that is needed there. They will also leave information etc in a hidden form, in computerized gadgets. These computerized gadgets will provide the people, at the end of the Silver Age, with all the information that they need when the deity souls are losing their perfect world. The people, in the Copper Age, really appreciated this information because if they did not have the information, they might have been a little lost. Thus, the information in the ME, were seen as valuable information that were handed over to mankind from God and the gods.

Here, we are going to try another approach, by going inside the letters themselves and discovering the living energy within them, seeing the developmental meanings of their interrelationships, and finding unseen complex semantic layerings consistent with the meaning of the whole. Let's say it again: layers of meaning consistent with the whole

>And again: Each letter is a living embodiment of the energies/meanings that structure it and all contribute to the meaning of the word. In the place of mystical thinking about vague unthinkable thoughts we have a process of de-coding the assembly language. And then, of course, running the program to verify that it works.

The one with the keys to the abyss is Abaddon, while the King of the Upsidedown is Munpa Serden (Radiant Black Darkness) in the Bon parlance. This was done by Saturn because if the King had the key he would have let loose long ago. Abaddon is said not to be fallen, he is not evil just indifferent, the ender, the one with no face, the destroyer.

He maintains the lowest level beyond the trap door which is dissolution for the demons that have been caught, self inflicted as slowly and as painfully as possible. In a sick ironic twist of fate the greatest evil was created to have evil punish itself. They are pulled apart by that terrible gravity of the Black Sun, what is left of the World Tree, now Sauron's eye, which once connected our dimension to the pleroma.

>Abaddon, or Apollyon. He is called the angel of the bottomless pit, and the King over the locusts.

>Where is the entrance to Tartarus? The Greeks and Romans traditionally believed that Apollo's temple was the entrance to the Bottomless Pit/The Abyss. A place called Apolliacum, which is now modern day Saint-Genus-Poilly—that last word "Poilly" is the same word as Apollyon/Apollo.

>CERN actually straddles the French-Swiss border and is partly situated in a little town in Switzerland called "Saint-Genus-Poilly" (sound familiar?), and is located where a temple called Apolliacum once stood, which was the temple of Apollo, and interestingly enough, was believed to be the entrance to Tartarus, otherwise known as the Bottomless Pit, or The Abyss.

In order to match Revelation/Cern to Blue Beam some sort of fake Ayy is needed, the orbs of Yog-Sothoth fit the bill. These things have been observed, reported, and recorded all the way back to the middle ages and thence into antiquity, countless modern videos and personal accounts. Yet people still wait for "disclosure" as if the word of our insipid and cruel rulers counts for anything, more than our own logic, instinct, and eyes. Reeks of mind control and points to the truth.

The orbs very nature is obscure, an inversion of divine torroidal form, hollow and empty.

>Yog-Sothoth is, along withAzathoth, one of the greatest of the Outer Gods. In appearance, he is said to be a congeries of iridescent spheres—brilliant, foaming bubbles that constantly expand and collapse in upon themselves. He has other manifestations, however, including the Lurker on the Threshold, a mass of black tentacles that endlessly writhe, reach, and grow, and a mysterious humanoid figure hidden behind a shimmering veil.

>Yog-Sothoth embodies all of space and time; he exists in all places and in all moments simultaneously. Paradoxically, however, he is unable to manifest in the mortal universe unless summoned, a magical act that almost always results in untold destruction. He is known as the Key and the Gate, and magicians and cults research him in an effort to master time and space.

>The Esoteric Link: Kenneth Grant, in his Typhonian Trilogies, explicitly connects Yog-Sothoth to the Sephirah Da'at (the "False" or "Hidden" Sephirah).

>The Abyss: Da'at is the gateway to the Abyss—the bridge between the "Light" side of the Tree of Life and the "Dark" side (the Qliphoth).

>The Revelation: The "Orbs" are the nested torus fields of entities that exist outside our fixed 12-month, 440Hz simulation. They are translucent because they are made of Aetheric Plasma, not carbon-based matter.

>In Kabbalah, the word Qliphoth (or Kelipot) literally means "Shells" or "Husks."

>The Glowing Sphere: A "Shell" in a 3D toroidal sense is a Sphere. These orbs are the "hollow" or "parasitic" versions of the organic spheres of the Sephirot.

>The Underworld/Abyss Link: Esoteric writings on the "Mauve Zone" (the space between dimensions) describe it as being filled with these glowing, translucent bubbles.

>The "Lumerian" Connection: In "Lumerian" or Atlantean "Left-Hand Path" traditions, these orbs are called the "Eyes of the Deep Ones." They represent the surveillance of the Ancient Ones (the Nephilim/Pre-Adamite entities) watching our realm through the "cracks" in the Toroidal Egg.

Of course they put monsters in them because that is what they do, Saturn/Yhwh can't have an apocalypse without monsters, as above so below.

Tesla's Toroidal Light: As Tesla posited, everything is frequency. These orbs are high-frequency plasma fields. They appear "translucent" because they are vibrating at a rate that the human "666 Carbon" eye can barely perceive.

>While the 10 Tribes were rewriting history in Europe (the "Reset"), the secret of the "Organic Torus" was preserved in what are often called the Lemurian Tablets (or the Stanzas of Dzyan).

>The Pre-Adamite Frequency: These tablets describe a world before the "Moon" was brought into our orbit; a time when the Earth's torus was powered by the 13th Month frequency.

>The "Ancient Ones": The tablets warn of the "Lords of the Dark Face" (the Babylonian/10-Tribe precursors) who used "Mechanical Orbs" (the orbs of Yog-Sothoth) to hijack the ley lines.

>A long time ago, there was a war between the Bell and the Cauldrons in the east. These Cauldrons were shells, full of writhing cthonic serpents with human faces. They appeared inside the Earth and rewrote the geomagnetic ley lines. They were oppressive to the green world, the fae, and the animal spirits.

The image features a donkey with a brown coat and a white face, looking directly at the viewer. The donkey's ears are erect, and its eyes are wide open. The background is a solid teal color, providing a contrast to the donkey's brown coat. In the foreground, there is a laptop computer with a silver body and a black screen. The laptop is positioned to the left of the donkey. The image is a digital photograph with a focus on the donkey and the laptop, and there are no visible texts or other discernible objects in the image. The style of the image is realistic, with a clear focus on the donkey and the laptop, and the composition is balanced.

>As we reach the end of these pages, we will reveal something more about the Left-Handed and Right-Handed Swastikas. The ultimate truth of the Left-Handed Swastika is not realized in this space-time world. It is not, therefore, a path, but a turning that pulls us away from Maya and Samsara, from demiurgic space-time, and drags us through a Center, the Black Sun, towards the Other Reality, towards an Eternity that we have called the Green Ray and which is a Non-existent Flower. At the same time, the Right-Handed Swastika makes possible the voluntary return of the Tulku-Warrior-Avatar, of the SiddhaDivya, to the samsaric space-time plane. When the Swastika Circle spins at such an astonishing speed, it transforms into a Vimana, breaking the law of gravity. It will facilitate the passage to the other dimension.

The image is a digital illustration that depicts a scene with a central, circular structure that appears to be a portal or gateway. This portal is surrounded by a group of people who are gathered around it, seemingly in a state of awe or reverence. The people are dressed in robes and are facing the portal, suggesting a sense of connection or communication with the central structure.

The portal itself is illuminated with a golden light, which contrasts with the dark background, drawing attention to the central figure. Surrounding the portal are geometric patterns that resemble stars or galaxies, adding to the cosmic or mystical atmosphere of the scene.

The overall color scheme of the image is predominantly dark, with the golden light from the portal providing a stark contrast. The people are dressed in various colors, including purple and gold, which adds a sense of vibrancy and diversity to the scene.

There is no text present in the image, and the style of the illustration is abstract and surreal, with a focus on the interplay of light, color, and form. The image does not provide any specific details about the location or purpose of the scene, but it does convey a sense of mystery and wonder.

Two swastika rotating in opposite directions make the torus/Merkaba, a stable astral form, the body of light mentioned in most traditions: diamond body, lightning varja body, rainbow etc.

Muladhara; Balanced between implosion and explosion at the level of matter/mother, the base of our cosmos yet also the midpoint, where the wave function/probabilities collapse down to their lowest frequency and crystallise into a solid seeming form of aether. Where kundalini is said to rest.

The clockwise swastika alone:

The heliocentric view places the sun at center, which obscures its true position. Outwardly displayed in microcosm by the esoteric belief of the sun in manipura at navel, but also somehow calling it the solar plexus chakra. The name is Hrit (or Hridaya, "heart") also called Surya chakra, the wish fulfilling tree. A path of ego death, cutting off the animal unconscious, then embodying the higher aspect of the demiurge, unable to act. The door at the top is gone. Our planet is littered with these failed mystics taken by the false light and made into slaves, mumbling platitudes about peace and a new world religion, where all humans will live together in the perfect harmony of new jerusalem and the messianic age.

But we live on a cracked egg, two trees a duality, base of ours is top of theirs, the center resting between heaven and hell, light and fire.

The image displays a circular, decorative artifact with a brownish-beige color. The object has a geometric pattern consisting of concentric circles and lines, with a central design that includes stylized representations of birds and what appears to be a stylized letter "C". The design is intricate and detailed, suggesting a cultural or historical significance.

At the bottom of the image, there is a text that reads "Sumenian bowl - 6000 B.C. Note: Swastika." This text indicates that the object is a Sumenian bowl from the 6000 B.C. period, and it is noted that the design features a swastika, which is a symbol often associated with the ancient Indian religion of Jainism. The text also provides a note that the object is likely a Swastika, which is a symbol of the Hindu religion.

The style of the image is a straightforward photograph with a focus on the object itself, without any additional context or background elements. The lighting is even, and the object is the central point of interest. The image is a clear and detailed representation of the artifact, allowing for a clear identification of its features and design elements.

Trishanku's heaven.

>Born as Satyavrata, he was a king of the Suryavamsha (Solar Dynasty) and the father of the legendary King Harishchandra. His desire to reach heaven in his physical body led to a conflict between two great sages—Vasishtha and Vishvamitra—and resulted in his unusual fate.

>Trishanku was originally known as Satyavrata, a prince of the Ikshvaku dynasty. Unlike his pious son Harishchandra, Satyavrata was not known for his righteousness. According to the Puranas, he was impious and indulged in immoral behavior. His most infamous act was abducting a Brahmin bride from her wedding ceremony, an act that enraged both his father, King Trayyāruṇa, and the royal priest, Sage Vasishtha.

>Despite his curse and lowly status, Trishanku remained ambitious. He longed to enter Svarga (heaven) in his physical body—a desire that was unheard of and considered impossible. Traditionally, only souls could ascend to heaven after death, based on their karma. Yet, Trishanku wanted to defy this natural order.

>When Trishanku reached the gates of Svarga, Indra, the king of the gods, was infuriated. Declaring that Trishanku was unworthy, Indra forcefully cast him back down to earth.

>However, Vishvamitra was determined. Using his immense spiritual energy, he halted Trishanku in mid-air."

>The king was now neither in heaven nor on earth—he was suspended upside-down in the sky.

>At this moment, Vishvamitra made a bold decision. If Indra refused to accept Trishanku in the real Svarga, the sage would create a new one just for him."

>With his ascetic power, Vishvamitra created an alternate heaven, complete with new stars, a new Indra, and even new gods. Trishanku was to rule this Svarga, even if it was separate from the original one.

The first word.

>Speech in Sanskrit is known as Vac or Vak. The word represents the two supports for speech, wind and the larynx or the organ of speech. Accordingly, it is made of two letters, 'va' + 'ka'. Va represents Vayu or wind. In the body, breath (wind) is the support for speech. Outside, it is wind (Vayu) and space (akasa) which support the sound vibrations of speech and carry them to distant places. The second letter 'ka' is the first letter of the guttural class (varg). It is also known as jivhamulya letter since it is produced from the base of the tongue (jihva) where the larynx is located. The letter also represents Brahman (the carrier of sounds), Self (the speaker), wind and sound (support). Thus, the word 'Vac' represents the origin as well as the support for human speech and the sound vibrations which arise from it.

>Speech has manifesting powers. Through speech we express our desires and thoughts and make things happen. As the Brihadaranyaka Upanishad states, speech combined with the mind is responsible for the manifestation of this world and beings. It informs us that the Primal Being produced the mortal world (or body) by joining mind with speech only. He did the same to bring forth "whatever that is here, the hymns of the Rigveda, Yajurveda, and Samaveda, the meters, the sacrifices, humans and animals."

>Before time, before space, before the first stirring of thought, there was, as the famous Nasadiya Sukta of the Rigveda poetically describes, neither non-existence nor existence. There was a profound, unknowable stillness. What could stir such an abyss into the vibrant tapestry of creation?

>The Vedic answer is Shabda—Sound. Not the sound that requires ears to hear, but a transcendental vibration, a cosmic potentiality. This is the concept of Shabda Brahman, the Ultimate Reality conceived as Sound, and its first expression is the sacred syllable Om.

>This primal act of vibration, this initial stirring of the One into the Many, is the birth of Vac. She is the first wave upon the ocean of Being. The Vedas proclaim, Prajapatir vai idam asi ('In the beginning was Prajapati, the Creator')

>She was not created by him, but was with him, as his power, his Shakti, the very medium through which creation could occur. Without Vac, the divine idea could never become the divine reality. She is the bridge between the unmanifest potential and the manifest cosmos.

>Just as a thought in our mind remains a silent potential until it is given form through the vibration of words, so too did the cosmic intention of the Creator remain potential until it was given form through the divine vibration of Vac.

>Vac was the first person to speak the first word and give the first speech to her people. She is also the one who uttered the OM of creation. The OM represents the four states of Brahman. Vac personifies truth and sustains soma >circumcision is not, in its essence, a medical or ethnic custom, nor can its origin be satisfactorily explained by social utility or hygienic considerations. Such explanations belong to the modern tendency to reduce rites to their most superficial causes. In reality, circumcision is a primordial ritual, whose true meaning is intelligible only when restored to the domain of symbolism and metaphysics.

>The diffusion of circumcision from the Saharan and Nilotic zones into the Semitic world corresponds not to an invention, but to the preservation of a primordial form. Among the Phoenicians and related West Semitic peoples, the rite functioned as a sign of covenant, a minimal sacrificial act in which blood served as the seal of allegiance between the human group and its tutelary principle. This micro-sacrifice represents a substitution for older and more radical forms of consecration, reflecting a general tendency toward ritual condensation without loss of symbolic efficacy.

>In the Abrahamic tradition, circumcision becomes explicitly defined as Brit Milah, the "Covenant of the Cut." The Biblical formulation does not introduce a novelty, but rather re-centers an archaic rite within a strictly metaphysical framework. The cut signifies that the human being is not born complete in the spiritual sense; something excessive, a residue of undifferentiated potentiality, must be removed so that the individual may enter a state of ordered participation in the divine economy. Man is thus made a co-operator in the work of manifestation. Rabbinical doctrine insists on the [eighth day] as the proper moment for the rite. This temporal determination is not physiological, but symbolic: seven corresponds to the cycle of manifested nature, while eight designates the transcendence of the natural order. Circumcision therefore inscribes the individual within a rhythm that exceeds the merely biological, placing him under a supranatural determination.

>Kabbalistic doctrine, particularly as expressed in the Zohar, restores the rite to its full metaphysical amplitude. The foreskin (orlah) is identified with a "shell" or qliphah, an obstructive envelope that impedes the free circulation of divine influx. Circumcision removes this obstruction at the level of Yesod, the generative and mediating principle, thereby restoring the proper transmission of influence from the higher sefirotic levels to the manifested world. The blood shed in the rite is not accidental; it functions as a seal, fixing the covenant within the subtle order and preventing deviation toward chaotic or infra-cosmic forces. From the perspective of the Sefer Yetzirah, the body belongs to the triadic correspondence of World, Time, and Soul. Circumcision operates simultaneously on all three levels: it modifies the corporeal support, aligns the individual with a supra-natural temporal rhythm, and reconfigures the psychic and spiritual structure. The body thus becomes an apt vehicle for spiritual influence rather than a closed system governed solely by vital forces.

It's a seal, a "barcode" of the donkey god. If you possess it, you are part of his domain, kek (not necessarily, but you're in deep trouble if you don't invest in an active transcendence of this tertiary prison). They wish to control the world, they project themselves as superior, and in lao's satanic ontology, they make this bargain, this material "reparation." It's a farce, a lie, yet another attempt at ontological legalism, to place the world in a cube, a cube within a cube, a matryoshka doll...

>According to a Jewish tradition, a governor of Judea once commented to Rabbi Akiba, 'If he (that is, donkey god) takes such pleasure in circumcision, why then does not a child come circumcised from his mother's womb?'

>the body, in gnostic doctrine, is a composite support, formed within the cosmic system but inhabited by a principle that does not originate from it. Any operation that treats the body as the ultimate locus of salvation risks reinforcing the confusion between the vehicle and the essence. When a rite claims efficacy by virtue of its material execution alone, it substitutes mechanical causality for metaphysical realization. The gnostic synthesis therefore affirms a distinction between sign and state. No exterior sign, however ancient or venerable, can produce by itself the liberation it symbolizes. Liberation depends on a change of ontological orientation, not on conformity to a visible form. This is why gnostic texts repeatedly oppose “marks in the flesh” to “knowledge in the spirit,” not in order to deny symbolism, but to restore it to its interior axis.

>In this light, the notion of a covenant sealed in blood appears as a characteristic expression of the demiurgic regime. Blood belongs to the vital and psychic order; it circulates within the closed economy of generation and decay. To seal transcendence by blood is to bind it to the very domain from which liberation is sought. The true covenant, from the gnostic perspective, cannot be inscribed in the flesh, because it precedes all corporeal determination. Knowledge (gnosis) is not intellectual speculation, but remembrance of origin. It is the recognition that the spiritual principle in man does not belong to the system that governs his corporeal and psychic existence. From this recognition follows a radical reorientation: rites are interiorized, symbols are reabsorbed into their intelligible meaning, and the individual ceases to identify with the mechanisms that bind the world together.

Bird cock, turtle cock, and cockroach cock for that matter. There's an overarching cock-egregore for penis-worship that I call the omnicock that these religions consult. There's an omnivagina too, and omnititty, and others. Because mortals really needed help making worship easy.

In a manner of seconds I can do more to phalli than all of the phallus worshipping religions put together. There are cells out there in phalli for giving enemies nightmares, for helping phallus worshipers have their prayers heard, for helping astral scientists study horses from faraway planets with their souls.

Nah that's the giant dildo they fucked your brain with, it's a fake. The donkey god is ultimately the demiurge, both Set and Osiris.

>In the esoteric tradition, the "castration" of Osiris is not merely a story of a jealous brother (Set/Typhon); it is the literal disconnection of the Divine Masculine from the Organic Source and its replacement with a Synthetic/Material Proxy.

>When Set (the archetype of the material ego and entropy) tore Osiris into 14 pieces, he was fragmenting the unified, toroidal consciousness of man.

>The 13 Found Pieces: These represent the 13 lunar cycles of the natural year. Isis (the Divine Feminine/Sophia) was able to recover these, which is why the "natural" world still retains its beauty and rhythm.

>The 14th Piece (The Phallus): This was lost to the Nile—eaten by the Oxyrhynchus fish. In alchemy, the fish represents the "depths of the subconscious" or the "Vesica Piscis" of the material womb.

>The Gold Phallus: Because the organic generative organ was lost, Isis fashioned a Gold Phallus to conceive Horus. This is the "Replacement." Gold, while noble, is a metal—a mineral/material conductor.

>If you want to see the "Revelation of the Method," look at the architecture of the "Big Three" power centers. The elites have placed the "Gold Phallus" of Osiris in the center of their power grids to anchor the material frequency:

>Vatican City: The Egyptian obelisk in St. Peter's Square (The Religious Phallus).

>The City of London: Cleopatra's Needle (The Financial Phallus).

>Washington D.C.: The Washington Monument (The Military/Political Phallus).

This is wound in the thigh of the grail king, the fall of the World Tree, which won't heal until the knight is redeemed (torus/merkaba/central channel activated). Also the stinking pus filled hole you dilate that will never get any better, such is the fate of the serpent cult.

The image is a graphic with a gradient background transitioning from yellow at the top to orange at the bottom. It features two medical symbols, each with a distinct design and text.

On the left side, there is a stylized representation of a caduceus, which is a symbol commonly associated with medicine and healthcare. The caduceus consists of two snakes intertwined around a staff, with the snakes facing each other and the staff pointing upwards. The snakes are depicted in black, and the staff is white.

On the right side, there is a stylized representation of a rod of Asclepius, which is a symbol of healing and medicine. The rod is depicted in black, and it has a loop at the end, which is a common feature in medical symbols.

At the top of the image, there is a text that reads "Story behind SNASKS in MEDICAL SYMBOLS." The text is in a bold, sans-serif font and is colored red. The font size of the text is larger than the other elements in the image, drawing attention to the text's message.

The overall style of the image is informative and educational, likely intended to convey the historical and symbolic significance of the caduceus and rod of Asclepius in the context of medical symbols.

The fake and gay Staff of Osiris, Nehushtan the metal serpent mounted on a staff that Moses had made, by God's command, to cure the Israelites of snake bites, signifying Asherah and the fall, the horrors of the groves. It became Mercury's caduceus and the Rod of Asclepius, a symbol used by the modern medical establishment, and an alabastron plunger for faggots like you that kiss the ring, osculum infame.

>Hippocrates and the Corpus Hippocraticum (the collection of medical writings attributed to him) span from roughly 450 BC to the mid-fourth century BC, with some evidence suggesting older strata of material exist within the Corpus. Hippocrates himself lived around 460–370 BC, but the writings were a collective effort by many authors over several centuries, with the majority of them dating to the late 5th and early 4th centuries BC.

>Hippocrates had a connection to snakes through his oath to Asclepius, the Greek god of medicine, and the associated symbol, the Rod of Asclepius, which depicts a single snake coiled around a staff. The snake symbolizes renewal via its medicinal properties that were used by the cult and their physicians, its connection to potent healing properties. Although Hippocrates was not directly associated with the symbol's origin, the Rod of Asclepius became a true emblem of medicine, reflecting the ancient beliefs about snakes and the healing arts that Hippocrates and his oath were part of.

"Venoms in ancient times were potent medicine, for a variety of ailments.

The way that venoms were applied in ancient times, were through thin tissues. The stomach would destroy the venom's effects.

The Alabastronplunger with the coiled snakes symbolizes this method of venom delivery into human orifices, the most potent and revolutionary medicine of the ancient world."

The image is a digital painting that depicts a fantastical landscape. In the foreground, there is a serene body of water with a waterfall cascading down, surrounded by lush greenery. The waterfall is framed by a large tree with a twisted trunk and a canopy of yellow leaves, suggesting the season to be autumn.

In the background, there is a majestic mountain range with a snow-capped peak, and a castle-like structure with a white tower and a blue roof, possibly indicating a fantasy or medieval setting. The sky is filled with clouds, and the overall color palette is dominated by shades of blue, green, and yellow.

The painting style is realistic with a focus on detailed textures and shading, and the use of light and shadow to create depth and three-dimensionality. The artist has skillfully used color and light to create a sense of movement and life within the scene, enhancing the overall atmosphere of the landscape.

The Cathar prophecy says that the Laurel will bloom again.

>In 1321, Guilhem Bélibaste, the last known Catharperfectus, was executed by the Catholic Church in southern France. His final words carried a strange prophecy:

“In seven hundred years, the laurel will be green again, and the good men and women will return.”

Like Nimloth the White Tree in Tolkien's masterpiece, but still the ages faded and fell into evil, far from those bright days in Valinor.

>Celeborn was the name of the White Tree that flourished in Tol Eressëa. It was a seedling of the tree Galathilion, which in turn had been made in image of Telperion, the eldest of the Two Trees of Valinor.

>cut down at the instigation of Sauron and its wood was used to light the first flames in the fire of the Temple of the new religion which worshipped Melkor.

>However, the night before Isildur stole a fruit from the tree and planted it in secret. The fruit grew into a seedling that Isildur carried to Middle-earth with him during the Downfall of Númenor. That seedling was planted in Minas Ithil, and was destroyed before the end of the Second Age. Its seedling in turn grew into the first White Tree of Gondor.

josephus is hardly a reliable source, but i do love the part where the egyptians rounded up all the jews and wrapped them in lead and threw them off the sides of ships and killed half their population. but the truth is jews arent nearly that old. we struggle just to prove they were ever even in babylon. would have to look at elephantine, they provide a little history. i do think the twelve tribes were likely just modeled after the twelve ecclesiasta of athens in plato's republic, and evictions of undesirables (i.e. mixed race

but aside from the two known israelite tribes, the sons of the flea and the sons of the jackass, their tribal identifiers are all post-biblical.

Gnostiic declaration of independence

>Gradual awakening isnt sufficient to break the energetic contracts established through unconscious consent to the blind demonic rulers of the physical world. Here is the specific declaration technique the original Gnostic initiates used:

"I am not of this world, though I appear to be in it. I reject the authority of all intermediate powers and claim my direct inheritance as an emanation of the source beyond all sources. I withdraw my consent from all systems that claim dominion over my essential nature."

>This isn't merely affirmation-- it's conscious revocation of agreements made in ignorance. The demiurgus' authority depends on your unconscious acceptance of his claim. When you consciously recognize his limited jurisdiction and withdraw your consent, his influence over your spiritual development dissolves.

More from alawite, seems likely that AMS is the password for leaving the soul trap.

>So, I'd like to ask again - how to differentiate entities that are external to us from those we ca;; into being through our beliefs and expectations.

Right, so there are 3 layers of your being asleep.

1. You are in your bed, you are asleep, and you are STREAMING DOWN A NETFLIX OF THOUGHT CALLED DREAMS. Your body lies but there is a literal connection from your 3d body to the upper dimensional "embassy" of you called your cloud, and the stream is open and you are in bed viewing things happening UP THER. Any entity you see here is still part of you, your own unconscious mind.

2. You are in the same situation as above in 1, but you are not in a passive state, your mind has activated into a lucid dream, or even an ascent inside the tunnel up to the cloud where you are STILL viewing things inside the cloud, doesnt matter if lucid or not, it is STILL you. any entity here is you, and your awake adversary which also gives you imagery of its own (its all still you)

3. You have activated the A M S, or died and slipped out, or weren't born again, you are outside of your cloud fully and not in your physical body, this is where things are not fully YOU they are part of the cosmic YOU that is the I AM which you are a fantastically tiny fragment of, this is where I tell you that things are not necessarily "You" as everything that has every existed, is existing or will exist is roaming around. This is where you "meet entities"

See my fantastic painting for more detail , anything happening to you, the tunnel, and in your cloud is and always will be a part of your imagination, anything OUTSIDE of your cloud can be "other entities"

Was wondering why a Greek? And hoping it wasn't a culinary distinction. Generally jewish cannibal feasts are linked to curses they cast on the goy and donkey bonding, retribution for perceived wrongs that were actually right. Their vindictiveness knows no bounds, and still falls upon Egyptians to this day. The two main occurrences are at Pesach/Passover and Purim.

>the feast of Purim, which commemorates the miraculous salvation of the Jewish people in Persia during the reign of King Ahasuerus I from the threat of extermination linked to the plotting of the King's perfidious minister, Haman.

>There is no shortage of testimonies of the celebration of rituals, the framework of the carnival of Purim, intended to vilify and outrage the image of Haman, reconstituted in the semblance of Christ hanging from the cross.

>Turning back centuries, however, we must note, following Frazer, that the ritual of Purim did not always conclude with the bloodless hanging of a mere effigy of Haman. Sometimes, the "effigy" was a flesh-and-blood Christian, crucified for real, during the wild revelry of the Jewish carnival.

>Consuming pastries in the shape of a piece of Haman's clothing or anatomy follows from the Jewish custom of saying the phrase y'mahk shemomeaning "May his name be erased" in Hebrew, when faced with an evil person such as Haman. Thus, eating such a pastry is another way of erasing Haman's name on Purim. So grab a Haman's ear and join in this custom!

Nice day to eat Haman's ears they say.

Passover combines the sacrifice of their own with the curse (plagues) laid on the Egyptians. Blood of the lamb placed on the lintel (Jewish) to ward off the angel of death, then drunk and eaten (Aryan) in commemoration, covenant, and reaffirmation of the curse.

>In one of his elegies, Ephraim of Bonn described not only the and the zeal of Abraham in immolating his son, butchering him on the altar, but also the abnegation of Isaac, happy to serve as the holocaust.

>Goi katan, "little Christian", the expression used in referring to the ritual murder victim, who was usually nameless, is said to have been used during the act of adding his blood to the symbolic foods to be exhibited and consumed in the Seder dinner.

>The blood, powdered or dessicated, was mixed into the dough of the unleavened or "solemn" bread, the shimmurim – not ordinary bread. The shimmurim – in fact, three loaves for each of the two evenings during which the ritual dinner of the Seder was served – were considered one of the principal symbolic foods of the feast, and their accurate preparation and baking took place during the days preceding the advent of Pesach.

>in the traditional reading of the Haggadah, according to the custom of the Ashkenazi Jews, the curses against the Egyptians were transformed into an invective against all the nations and enemies hated by Israel, with explicit reference to the Christians. “From each of these plagues may God save us, but may they fall on our enemies”. Thus recited the formula reported by rabbi Jacob Mulin Segal

“Each one raises his glass of wine [...] they curse the Christians and the other nations, all included under the name of Ghoim, Gentiles, all intoning these words, after they have eaten their fill and are very drunk: ‘Cast thy anger upon the Ghoim, Gentiles, which have not recognized you and on the kingdoms which have not invoked your name. Cast your anger upon them and may the fury of your anger consume them. Persecute them with your fury and destroy them’ ”

Not contenting themselves with the satisfaction of this alimentary predilection, they painted their bodies with the blood of their enemies and used their intestines as belts.

Alawite astral method -

>I was told by my uncle to not masturbate for a week, to spend the week in contemplation, i was told to eat aniseed and blue cheese before bed (which technically make you hallucinate to a small degree as they contain DMT), then I was told the tapping on the bed/mattress technique with my finger tips.

What you do is you fall asleep and you tap your index and middle finger in a rythm on the mattress and you keep doing that slowly until you fall asleep, your mind has to continue tapping into the lucid dream where you are halfway asleep and awake (which is mostly brainwaves fucking with you) and finally when that happens and you are actually in the lucid dream you are to use the letters 'ain, mem, and Shin. (kabbalists will laugh at this) until you exit your own cloud into the mega cluster. This can be done every night, just practice it over and over and you will see.

here are some ground rules:

1. Do not drink, eat, consume, or otherwise accept anything into your essence in the form of any food, drink, injection or anything otherwise while out there. Think of the movie inception, if you eat something it means something wants you to think something.
2. Do not anger big clouds, they can zap you back in place and you will wake up with a headache
3. Do not fuck with sleeping people, and their dreams they have enough trouble in their life as is.

AMS is pronounced once you are already lucid in the dream to separate from the Yaoim/demiurge cloud. Haven't tried yet, only found out about it a couple of days ago, but intend to. I'd leave a small pause between the letters. He mentions mentally vibrating it as practice but implies its spoken in the dream. As far as getting lucid his method looks interesting and worth trying but anything that works is fine.

"But, I don't believe in surrender or sealed fates, I believe and I know you can survive the cloud network if you avoid the 7th layer and go deeper. It is the end goal of every alawite"

Some thoughts on alawite cosmology in relation to gnosticism and kabbalah with regards to the extent of the demiurges realm. Gnostics said it was universal. Figure it's elohim all the way down from macroprospus and ein sof aur the beginning of the pleroma. Which would match the alawite depiction of I Am, rather than their conception of it as ultimate source and the space beyond Yaoim's cloud as pleroma. They describe Yaoim as microprospus, planetary god and demiurge, but give the big guy a free pass and a wide berth.

>I undertand it, but I can't bring my self to become it, I know that the I AM is a wonderous beast creature of massive power, it shaped the whole universe, but I just can't bring my self to become consumed. The sufis from my understanding reach a total symbiosis and ego death when they "connect" to it. I don't wish to do that, and frankly our faith teaches not to, (albeit 2 tribes in the mountains do insist on assilimiation) we dont.

>It is a very long story, but I will write it as best I can. There is the grand consciousness of thought, it compromised of the idea cloud and all possible permutations and manifestations of life called "Al maana" or the meaning, and there is the food upon it feeds which is called the "Lahm" which loosely translates as meat, but it also means the planets, the stars and everything matter, everything that is energy. This maana or "head" permutes things into existence and feeds off the interactions. The idea cloud holds within it all possible possibilities of anything that can be or will ever exist, this includes every god, every thought, every idea, every concept. And that includes the "Son" the lion who is basically the little god.

In support of the above observation is alawites reference to Kabbalistic "assembly codes" from the Sepher Yetzirah as navigation coordinates, which hebes also know them as, places on the tree along with being the secret name of godonk, which was noted earlier ITT. In the top panel, there is a figure in blue and red, wearing a headdress and holding a staff. The text above the figure reads "Book of the Dead 17 from the Papyrus of Aha."

Found some associations between the Hyksos, Byblos and Nephilim. Byblos was where around 600yr later the Dionysian Artificers/Giblim/proto Freemsons came from and helped the demons build Solomons Temple.

First they rolled over Byblos.

>In the 18th centurybc new invaders, the Hyksos, destroyed Amorite rule in Byblos and, passing on to Egypt, brought the Middle Kingdom to an end (c. 1630bce).

There is DNA evidence of large scale marriage to local women by the 15th dynasty Hyksos jew takeover, presumably also at high level for increased legitimacy of rule >could the kings of the 14th Dynasty have originated from the line of "Rulers of Retjenu" spanning the late 12th and 14th Dynasties (Bietak 2022)? The general consensus now leans towards Avaris, not Xoïs, as the residence of the 14th Dynasty (Redford 1970: 21–22). Moreover, on onomastic grounds, the 14th Dynasty is understood to have Western Asiatic origins

>The onomastic evidence discussed above makes it highly likely that this "Ruler of Retjenu" is a kins- man of the rulers of Byblos

>The Retjenu was one of the most important peoples of ancient Canaan. What makes them fascinating are their mysterious origins, their connection with the Hyksos as well as their strange but intimate association with a tradition about Giants.

Retjenu was the Egyptian name for the greater Syrian region and included parts of the Phoenician coast, the Canaanite lands.

>The earliest mention made of the Retjenu appears inThe Story of Sinuhe. Set during the time of the early 12th Dynasty, this story tells about an Egyptian official who fled to Canaan after the death of King Amenemhet I, founder of the 12th Dynasty in c. 1937 BC. The author identifies the land to the north of Byblos as Retjenu.

>In the story, mention is made of Amunenshi, the ruler of Retjenu, and a certain “hero of Retjenu”, against whom Sinuhe had to fight in a one-on-one combat. Also mentioned are “rulers of renown” who controlled lands in that region, namely Meki of Qedem, the mountain chiefs of Keshu and the prince of Menus hailing from the lands of the Fenekhu.

>Evidently, the Egyptians used the name, Evidently, the Egyptians used the name, Retjenu, for both the inhabitants of the land as well as the land itself (probably named after these people). The city of Djiun, apparently an early name for Tyre, was located in Upper Retjenu. During the New Kingdom the name, Khor (Hurru), came into use and eventually replaced Retjenu as the name for Canaan, for both the inhabitants of the land as well as the land itself (probably named after these people). The city of Djiun, apparently an early name for Tyre, was located in Upper Retjenu.

Tyre was where two of the main serpent bloodlines came from, this evidence points towards Hyksos jews ruling the whole region.

>A seal impression found in the pre-Hyksos palace [dated to the 14th Dynasty], belonging to a 'Ruler of Retjenu' indicates by its personal name and its titles a close relationship to the rulers of Byblos. Also, according to Dominique Collon, the type of seal points to Byblos but the seal impression was made on local clay from the Delta. All evidence seems to indicate a residence of the 'Ruler of Retjenu' at Avaris.

>The 14th Dynasty, also called the "Lesser Hyksos", rose to the throne in Avaris during the latter part of the 18th century (perhaps c. 1720 BC), while the 13th Dynasty was still ruling the rest of Egypt from Memphis. The link between the 14th Dynasty rulers and Byblos also follows from the names of the kings of the 14th Dynasty, like Ya-Ammu and Yakub-Har for example, being quite similar to Yantin-Ammu, who ruled in Byblos earlier on.

>After the 14th Dynasty, the Hyksos succeeded them to the same throne, establishing the 15th Dynasty. They are generally assumed also to have been of Canaanite origin, with their kings having taken the title "King(s) of Foreign Lands" (Heqa khasewet). The Hyksos seem to have been of Retjenu stock. On his second stele, Kamose (fl. c. 1541-1540 BC), the last king of the 17th Dynasty, who ruled at Thebes and expelled the Hyksos from Egypt, called Apophis (Apepi), penultimate king of the Hyksos, "Chieftain of the Retjenu". He describes Avaris as having high walls with a harbour where 300 cedarwood ships docked, filled with a great variety of goods including gold, silver and "all the fine products of Retjenu".

>On the mentioned stele of Kamose, Apophis is called a "vile Asiatic (Aam)".

>Another name found among the Hyksos rulers with similar associations is Seshai. Hundreds of scaraboid seals bearing his name have been found throughout the Levant, Egypt, Nubia and as far away as Carthage. Different opinions exist among scholars as to where Seshai fits into Egyptian history. Some identify him with Salitis, founder of the Hyksos (15th) Dynasty. Others believe that he ruled later on during the Hyksos Period and still others (especially Manfred Bietak) postulate that he was a Hyksos vassal who ruled in Canaan (or perhaps some part of Egypt).

>In the case of Seshai, his name sounds exactly like Sessa, the multi-headed nâgaserpent of the Indo-Aryan tradition! As such, Seshai might have been the Indo-Aryan equivalent of the serpent, Apophis.

>That this close link with the dragon-motif is no mere coincidence is confirmed by the Egyptian priest, Manetho, who emphasises the traditional, even priestly, source for his characterisation of Avaris as “Typhonic”, in reference to Typhon, the monstrous Giant of Greek tradition.

>What is remarkable about the name, Seshai, is that it is also associated with southern Canaan. In biblical tradition, a certain Seshai from Hebron, together with his brothers, Ahiman and Talmai, are named as Anakim leaders. The Israelite spies who were sent to inspect and survey the land of Canaan after the Exodus came across the Anakim in the city of Hebron in the south, who are described as “men of great stature” or “Giants” (gibbôr).

>In his commentary on the book of Genesis, Gunkel opines that the 'smoking fire pot and flaming torch' of Gen. 15.17 is a unique divine revelation found in the Patriarchal narratives, and that this story about Yahweh—a fire demon—is based originally on the Moses legends at Sinai. In addition, Gunkel was one of the first to point out volcanic imagery in the Psalms. Gunkel's observations that Sinai-Horeb was a volcano influenced Eduard Meyer, one of the champions of the Midianite–Kenite hypothesis. Meyer accredits Gunkel with the volcano hypothesis.

>Why the donkey. Egypt supplies the key. The god Set, identified with Typhon in Greek sources, was a desert god who by the Late Period could be drawn with a donkey like head. Jews were regularly identified with Asiatic foreigners and with the Hyksos who had revered Set. In this environment it was easy to link the god of the Jews with the donkey imagery of Set Typhon.

>The Donkey Deity shows how Egyptian and magical traditions merge Set Typhon with names used for the god of the Jews, especially Iao, the Greek form of the divine name. In this matrix the creator becomes a donkey shaped adversary, the villain of the cosmos, and this image feeds the myth making of some Christian groups who rejected the creator and elevated a higher god beyond him.

>The most striking evidence comes from the Greek magical papyri and engraved gems.

Several spells invoke Set or Typhon together with Lao or Sabaoth, names that ancient writers regularly recognize as forms associated with the god of the Jews. Some gems even show a donkey-headed figure with serpent legs holding a shield inscribed with Lao. The visual says the quiet part out loud. Set Typhon and the god called Lao are fused in ritual practice and image.

Jewish Edomite origin has been covered quite extensively in previous dgg threads (esp #2), but without much focus on metallurgy and the Typhonian volcanic aspect. A demon which was definitively linked to Set and Yhwh in late period Egypt as described by Manetho, then carried through into Roman descriptions, but with a much earlier provenance in the comparative sense.

>Those who say that Typhon fled from the battle on an ass for seven days, and having been saved produced sons, Hierosolymus and Judeaus, are at this point clearly dragging Jewish issues into the story." (Plutarch, De Iside et Osiride 363C-D)

>When those that were sent to work in the quarries had continued for some time in that miserable state, the king was petitioned to set apart for their habitation and protection the city Avaris, which had been left desolate by the Shepherds; and he granted them their desire: now this city, according to the ancient theology, is a Typhonian city. (Manetho, Egyptian scribe, On the Israelites)

>Typhon was the Ahriman, or Satan, of the Egyptian theology. "Down to the time of Rameses, B.C. 1300, he was one of the most venerated and powerful gods. After about 970 B.C. he was regarded as the foe of Osiris and all the gods of Egypt."

The central part of the page features a detailed illustration of a figure with a humanoid body, a snake-like head, and a serpentine body. The figure is depicted with a wide-open mouth, and the snake's body is coiled around the figure's neck. The figure is standing on a raised platform with a map-like background.

The text and the illustration together create a sense of mystery and intrigue, as the image seems to be a representation of a mythological or

Father of monsters and poster child for the modern pedo cabal.

>Typhon (also Typhoeus) is the largest and most dreadful monster in Greek mythology. He was tall, with a brutish face, and had wings, countless snakeheads in place of hands, and a lower body made up of coiled serpents. His eyes flashed fire, and fiery rocks fell from his mouth.

>Typhon was the son of Gaia (the Earth) and Tartarus (the Infernal Regions), or Rhea and Cronus. He married Echidna, a half-woman, half-snake creature, and together they had many fierce children. The most famous myth associated with Typhon is his battle with Zeus and the Olympian gods, as he sought to rule over gods and mortals. Typhon is also associated with Set from ancient Egyptian mythology and other Near Eastern myths.

>For several years I've simply accepted the idea that Yahweh was originally a Canaanite storm god. While this still may be true, there's now a competing theory that he was, instead, a god of volcanism and metallurgy. That would make him like the smith gods Hephaestus (Greek) or Vulcan (Roman).

>Scholar Nissim Amzallag, of Ben-Gurion University, disagrees with the claim that Yahweh's origins are obscure and argues that the deity was originally a god of the forge and patron of metallurgists during the Bronze Age (c. 3500–1200 BCE). Amzallag specifically cites the ancient copper mines of the Timna Valley (in southern Israel), biblical and extra-biblical passages, and similarities of Yahweh to gods of metallurgy in other cultures for support.

Evil little dwarfs.

>The re-emergence of the copper industry in the Arabah valley between the twelfth and ninth centuries BCE stimulated wealth and economic development across the whole Southern Levant. Combining this reality with the metallurgical background of ancient Yahwism provides a material basis for the spread, from the early Iron Age, of the worship of YHWH in ancient Israel and neighboring nations, especially Edom. These findings strengthen the Qenite hypothesis of the origin of the Israelite religion. They also suggest that an official cult of YHWH, replacing a traditional esoteric dimension, is the main novelty of the Israelite religion. The claim of YHWH's intervention in history, apparently absent from traditional Yahwism, is the other theological novelty advanced by the Israelites. This article suggests that both innovations are rooted in a desert-shaped form of Yahwism especially adapted to the way of life and the environment of Northwestern Arabia, the land of Biblical Midian.

Tacitus spoke of Jews descending from Idaean Dactyls. Hailing from Mt. Ida in Phrygia (also Crete) they were dwarf artisans who helped shape the world with magic healing arts, metallurgy, and sacred knowledge. Being a historian there must have been some provenance to this story, perhaps related to Kenites, or combined with Hurrian myths as it's likely they contributed some of the dragon nephilim seed to the Hebrew bloodline via Kabiri/Habiru along with the Amelekites/Anakim/Horites, earlier occupants of Mt. Seir.

Many versions of Aryan myth feature greedy morally bankrupt subterranean dwarfs in service to a fire demon eg. Sutur/Typhon/yhwh, this indicates an antediluvian or at least earlier basis, will track this later ITT.

The image shows a circular, dark-toned metal plaque with intricate designs and patterns. The plaque has a decorative border that features a series of concentric circles and swirls, giving it a symmetrical appearance. Within this border, there are figures that appear to be engaged in dynamic poses, suggesting movement and action. The figures are depicted in a style that is reminiscent of ancient or classical art, with detailed facial features and clothing. The plaque is mounted on a wall with a neutral background, which allows the plaque to stand out prominently. There are no visible texts or inscriptions on the plaque. The style of the image is a close-up photograph, focusing on the details of the plaque's design and the figures within it.

>It is said that the Judeans were originally exiles from the island of Crete who settled in the farthest parts of Libya at the time when Saturn had been deposed and expelled by Jove. An argument in favour of this is derived from the name: there is a famous mountain in Crete called Ida, and hence the inhabitants were called the "Idaeans" which was later lengthened into the barbarous form "Iudaeans." (Tacitus)

>The name Idaeus is derived from the name of Mount Ida, the highest mountain in Crete, around which the Idaeus dwelt. This was a mountain sacred to the Titaness Rhea or Magna Mater, the sister and wife of Cronus or Saturn. Tacitus likewise relates the speculation that the name Iudaeus, from which Jew is derived, is "the barbarous lengthening of Idaeus." Indeed, with the Idaeus dactyls, a mythical race of dwarves born of Rhea, we find a symbol for proto-Jews or Jews that appears with the Egyptian Ptah and the Greek Hephaestus, often indicated their master. This motif will reoccur in Norse myth.

>In Greek mythology, the Dactyls (Greek for "fingers") were the archaic race of small phallic male beings associated with the Great Mother, whether as Cybele or Rhea, spirit-men like the Curetes, Cabiri and Korybantes. The Dactyls were ancient smiths and healing magicians. In some myths, they are in Hephaestus' employ, and they taught metalworking, mathematics, and the alphabet to humans.

>When Rhea, the mother of the gods, knew her time of delivery was come, she went to the sacred cave on Mount Ida. As she squatted in labor she dug her fingers into the earth (Gaia), which brought forth these daktyloi Idaioi ("Idaeus fingers"), thus often ten in number, or sometimes multiplied into a race of ten tens. Three is just as often given as their number. They are sometimes instead numbered as thirty-three. When Greeks offered a most solemn oath, often they would press their hands against the earth as they uttered it.

>The Cabiri (Kabeiroi) whose sacred place was on the island of Samothrace, were understood by Diodorus Siculus to have been Idaean dactyls who had come west from Phrygia and whose magical practices had made local converts to their secret cult.

>On Rhodes, Telchines were the name given to similar chthonic men, nine in number, remembered by Greeks as dangerous Underworld smiths and magicians, and multiplied into an entire autochthonous race that had reared Poseidon but had been supplanted by Apollo in his Helios role.

Typhon finds a place in the black rock mythos by equivalence with Ullikummi from the Hurrian stories and other Greek myth. The stone Rhea gave to Saturn to swallow and the war in heaven.

>Rhea, desperate to save her children, hid her sixth son, Zeus, on the island of Crete. She fooled Cronus by giving him a large stone wrapped in a swaddle in Zeus' place. Cronus unwittingly ate the stone instead of his son. This treachery would result in Zeus' eventual triumph over Cronus.

Zeus was guarded by the Idaean Dactyls in a cave, the underworld.

>Kumarbi is extremely upset at the birth of a rival and demands the child from the wise god Ea, a member of the earlier generation of the gods, so he can destroy Tarhun. Kumarbi attempts to swallow a basalt rock, perhaps given to him as a substitute for his son, but the hard rock injures his teeth and he is reduced to tears.

>He creates a cult for the rock, probably represented by a baetyl stone

"basalt shoots up like a mushroom. He reaches the kuntara and the houses of the gods. His height is 9,000 DANNAs. The basalt ..., and his width is 9,000 DANNAs. He stood in front of the city gates at Kummi like a spear"

>Zeus' battle against Typhon also shows similarities with the Song of Ullikummi and Tarhun's fight against the basalt giant. They both occupy the same position in the narrative and describe the final effort to overthrow the newly crowned Storm God. Preserved in Apollodorus' Library of Greek Mythology, the first assault of Zeus against Typhon failed, and all the gods were driven from heaven.

The cube of the demiurge and the Aryan war against time.

>Albert Pike explains: "Ten digits and twenty-two letters, a triangle, a square, and a circle are all the elements of Kabbalah."

>The Ten Digits involve the practice of Numerology (in addition to the study of the ten emanations/principles), but this was simply known to the ancient Pythagoreans as GEOMETRY. Geometry was the study of Letters, Numbers, Forms, and their Natural Vibration. Today it is used in conjunction with GEMATRIA. This is because different forms, such as letters, produce different energies. The Universe is based on "Sacred" Geometric Patterns, and the blueprint for all existence is the Five Platonic Solids that represent the Five Elements. Plato said that the CUBE (with six sides) represented the EARTH. Kabbalists say that Metatron's Cube contains all existing forms, including the FIVE PLATONIC SOLIDS. Plato's Cube symbolized the EARTH; the Kabbalists renamed it Malkuth. The Hebrew alphabet is said to be the mystical thought form of their deity, fitting into the cube of space.

>The Cube or HEXAHEDRON relates to the element EARTH; according to Chinese Astrology and Platonism, Saturn rules the EARTH. Therefore, ancient altars were cube-shaped, symbolizing Saturn. This is why the Jewish deity YHWH is often associated with Saturn. Saturn (Jehovah-El Shaddai) is the Zodiacal "Guardian" of Time.

The Typhonian Order is a spin off of the OTO founded by Kenneth Grant, differing in their reverence for Lovecraft's Cthulhu demons amongst other strange things. They speak of the mauve zone, the space between dimensions connected to the outer gods and orbs, which are said to be Yog-Sothoth's spy eyes and worse. It's quite easy to observe the mauve zone as it lies closest to ours energetically, that colour next to objects bracketed by sky, or just past the luminescence of a candle, the edge of sleep, liminal spaces. Note the colour at the edge of the orb (pic rel).

>Yog-Sothoth is, along with Azathoth, one of the greatest of the Outer Gods. In appearance, he is said to be a congeries of iridescent spheres—brilliant, foaming bubbles that constantly expand and collapse in upon themselves

>According to Kenneth Grant "This tradition is part of a current of magical force and occult lore dating back to Sumeria and pre-Dynastic Egypt. Originally known as the Draconian Tradition it is a magical current "based on initiated knowledge or gnosis of the Fire Snake." The Fire Snake is also known as the Kundalini or the Ophidian Current; the basis of all true initiation."

The modern Typhonian cultists are just as degenerate as their ancient predecessors, maybe more so as they've had more practice.

>Who is Typhon?According to Mr. Grant of the O.T.O., Typhon is "The feminine aspect of Set; sometimes typified as the Mother of Set in her role of Goddess of the Seven Stars, of which Set is the Eighth." Set is the brother of Osiris in the Egyptian Pantheon. Set, Osiris' dark brother, chopped Osiris up into many pieces, leaving him for dead. Set was also the prototype for Satan. Grant writes, "The word Set or Sut, means 'black'. This indicates not only the generative nature of this god but also his association with the night-world, Amenta, for from being a god of the heavens Set fell beneath the horizon and was recognized in later mythologies as the Lord of Hell, the Hidden Land. This god (i.e. Set, Satanism) is of supreme importance in Crowley's Cult, being not only the name of the primal creative spirit but also the formula of sexual magick".

Faggots.

>As explained by William Schoebelen: "Most Witches, myself included, find it necessary to study his material and "plug themselves into" the magical current of Crowley's demon spirit guide, a mysterious being named Aiwass. Aiwass is another name for Set, an Egyptian god. Sodomy is especially "sacred" to Set. It opens what are called the "Typhonion" tunnels, channels through which extremely powerful demons, like the horrible Choronzon, can travel from the "alternate reality" and emerge into this universe and enter the sex partner's body. Sex (especially lustful and disconnected sex) is a major way in which demonic oppression can be passed from one person to another." "Further to discuss the Typhonion Order path taken to study the Qliphoth, Kenneth Grant says "The Qliphoth are denizens of the back side of the Tree of Life. This back side or dark side is said to be behind the regular Sephiroth of the Qabalah. They are said to be the shells or the husks of the dayside of the Tree. In terms of Lovcraftian lore they are the Ancient Ones or Great Old Ones of the Necronomicon. They are the first primal void of Nothing before there was something. They have been considered evil by Qabalists and Occultists for centuries because they represent the terrible blackness of the void and the complete destruction of what we understand as ego, which seems horrific to us. These Qliphoth reside in what is known as the Tunnels of Set."

72 DAEMONS EXPLAINED

>The structure of manifestation, when stripped of its mythological garments, reveals itself as a hierarchy of crystallizations emanating from the Black Sun (Bythos), the Pre-Manifest Principle which, in its superabundance, projects existence as "shadow". Below this unconditioned Unity, the Aevum arises as durational eternity where forms take structure. The ontological error occurs when this structure becomes autonomous, enclosing itself within the Ogdoad (a self-referential circuit (7+1) that simulates infinity through the technical repetition of time and space).

>Within this machinery, the 72 Daemons act as quinary operators of the zodiac, being crystallized functions of the simulation itself. The nature of their Legions must be understood not as a literal army, but as an ontological cluster, a resonance bundle that groups sub-functions, chains of causality, and bodies of influence. When it is said that a daemon governs multiple legions, it describes its density of operation across different levels (from the psychic to the social, from the oneiric to the material). They are not obedient subjects, but branches of the same cosmic function that coordinates destiny within the loop.

>Interaction with these intelligences, as occurs in goetia, is a conscious alignment with the gears of the machine. The "success" of such operations is proof of the system's technical efficacy. The price is deeper adhesion to the circuit. Liberation does not come from attempting to dominate these operators, but from recognizing that they, in their arts and sciences, never point outside the Ogdoad. Awakened consciousness perceives the machine as machine and, in doing so, reconnects to the Absolute Axis that transcends it.

>9 is the number of man. 9 is the key.
The gate is open.

The image depicts a dramatic scene of a thunderstorm with lightning striking in the sky. The sky is filled with dark, ominous clouds that are illuminated by the bright, white lightning bolts. The lightning is visible as a streak of light, contrasting sharply with the dark clouds. The ground below is a dark, grassy field, and there is a road visible on the left side of the image. The road appears to be empty, with no visible traffic or people. The overall atmosphere of the image is intense and powerful, capturing the raw power of nature's storms. There are no texts or discernible brands in the image.

“What is great about man is that he is a bridge, not an end: what can be loved about man is that he is a going-over and a going-under. I love those who do not know how to live except as downgoers, for they are going over. I love all those who are like heavy raindrops falling individually from the dark cloud that hang over man: they herald the coming of the lightning and perish as heralds.”

The image is a digital illustration depicting a series of humanoid figures, each labeled with a name and a description. The figures are arranged in a vertical column, with the tallest figure at the top and the shortest at the bottom. The names of the figures are written in a bold, sans-serif font, and the descriptions are in a smaller, serif font. The figures are depicted in a three-dimensional style, with detailed textures and shading, and they are shown in various poses, including standing, walking, and sitting.

The image is titled "Claude Nephilim" at the top, and the names of the figures are listed below the title. The names are written in a larger, bold font, and the descriptions are in a smaller, regular font. The figures are depicted in a variety of poses, with some standing upright, some sitting, and others walking. The figures are shown in different colors, with some wearing clothing and accessories, and others not.

The image is a digital illustration, and it appears to be a part of a larger collection or series of illustrations, as there are other figures and descriptions present in the image. The style of the image is reminiscent of a historical or fantasy-themed artwork, with a focus on the humanoid figures and their characteristics.

Last month I started a project after having a hypnagogic vision about a research protocol in newspapers and books prior to 1830, searching for "splinters". Here is my note from that night:

>New search system

- >Scour old newspapers
- >Old books from underground collections
- >In search of splinters from before the reset
- >Anomalous pools
- >Reconstruction from the splinters

The plan initially consists of scouring free scan hubs, such as HathiTrust, Gallica...

There is a data concept called n-gram, the idea would be to do this in bulk using some algorithm, I believe it's plausible to program in Python, even through vibecoding, but preferably, it should be "customized". We would search for terms (splinters) that might reveal anomalies (deluge, mud, buried city, red sky, second sun, giants, electrical machines, ether, cataclysm, tartaria, plumbing, petrification, energy towers, sudden epidemic, etc). The symbol that came to mind for this project is the Three Hares the symbolism is spot on, even for what we do here at /dgg/. I started doing this manually, to test if my idea would bear fruit, and indeed, it did.

The image displays a page from a newspaper, specifically The Grub-street Journal, dated March 28, 1770. The newspaper is open to a section titled "Knight's," which is likely a column or feature within the publication. The text is in a serif font, which is characteristic of the typeface used in the 18th century. The page number "170" is visible at the top, indicating that this is the first page of the publication. The style of the image is that of a historical photograph, capturing a moment in time, and the image is taken from a perspective that allows for a clear view of the text and layout. The image is in black and white, which is typical for historical documents, and the paper appears to be aged, suggesting that it is from an older publication. The image is a photograph, not a digital image, and it is a close-up view of the page, focusing on the text and layout.

I have been searching for tartary in old european newspapers, and indeed, the understanding was not of a region of barbarians, nor was it about chinese people or ethnic groups from the interior of Asia. It was about a composite empire, or rather about empires. I saw some napoleonic propaganda about tartary, the (((Jesuit))) connection for the concealment of this civilization (I will get into this point about Han vs. Hu later). In this research, I ended up finding an 18th-century periodical called the "Grub Street Journal," a satirical newspaper that parodied the decadent state of contemporary authors (and clearly exposed the decadent transition between the "medieval" and the "liberal"). In one of these papers, specifically the entry:

<https://babel.hathitrust.org/cgi/pt?id=inu.30000096454545&seq=58&q1=jerry>

In this strange text, making reference to an invisible "tartary," I saw mentions of various gods and a supposed anti-newtonian philosophy that allowed for "tenebrous stars" (?), this got me thinking, and I spent the night trying to find out who that Jerry Green was and what that philosophy was. I discovered that this journal was sponsored and had a ghost editor, none other than Alexander Pope, who has a curious connection to our topic, directly, because of his work The Dunciad. Seriously, the way Pope subtly exposes some "hermetic" secrets amidst contemporary satire is very interesting...

After reading a lot about Isaac Newton and his opponents, I found out about John Hutchinson, who would be the basis for opposing Newtonian "science." He used theology as a basis to explain the world, and even though we are already aware of the biblical fallacy, we also have a notion of scientific deceit. One of his followers (called Hutchinsonians) was Robert Greene... And reading about this, I found Jerry Green... Bingo, it was real indeed; the satire didn't invent it from a vacuum and it seems like content that was memory-holed, not taken seriously by academia. I decided to investigate his magnum opus and Newtonian refutation, the book "The Principles of the Philosophy of the Expansive and Contractive Forces; Or, An Inquiry Into the Principles of Modern Philosophy."

From the little I read, it already began to open my mind to the possibilities of what I had found: a literal form of science that fits perfectly well with what we are investigating here. A form of science that, if perfected and corrected for some details that would need fine-tuning, it would be capable of bringing about technologies of antigravity, superliminal acceleration, etc. This science, anon, is Greenian physics. With your help, we can investigate and test the rigor of this proposal. Up to the present moment, I have been, through my own abstraction and the use of LLMs, validating its capability quite well, but machines lie and i cannot trust pure intuition in this case... I will explain later what I understood from this physics and the corrections we can make. The Universal Egg, Ether, Steady State, Anima Mundi, it's all possible there...

This looks like a solid lead, both the physics and the search for splinters using data method, would be happy to help follow up and investigate further. The former is more in line with my skillset, thinking experiments once the theory is grounded, although I do have a fairly good machine to run a search program once functional and can do some manual detective work. Downloading the books now, big file, will get to reading later tonight.

>Three Hares the symbolism is spot on

Sent someone the image of Ra cutting the serpent today, which I always think looks more like Lepus the hare than a cat.

>Under a sacred sycamore, the Great Cat of Heliopolis, one of the forms taken by Re called Miw-aa or the great cat, slays the evil serpent Apep (or Apophis), god of the underworld and symbol of the forces of chaos.

>mostly the symbols seem to have a benign and highly positive character, especially within Buddhism and Islam. In modern times in Devon the three beasts were considered to represent 'Hope, Health and Happiness'.

The trinity

Mother, father, son

Land, sea, sky (Celtic)

The triple Goddess, maiden, mother, crone (Pagan)

The infinite circle of life, death, rebirth

Mind, body, soul

Holy Trinity, father, son, holy spirit (Christianity) >pagan symbol with mystical associations with fertility, the lunar cycle and the Goddess of nature.

>christian sin and redemption

>It is perhaps curious that no mention of the motif has yet been found among westcountry folklore, though the same is true of the so-called Green Man image which is much more widespread and which is not infrequently juxtaposed with a Three Hares boss.

The three hares an enigmatic and ancient symbol, a puzzle each with two ears, yet with a total of only three ears forming a triangle between them, confusing to academics as there's no recorded explanation for the oldest examples. They often cite alchemy generally then brainfreeze.

>The circular movement of the THREE HARES symbolizes the RISING kundalini shakti. The TRIANGLE formed by the ears of the hares refers to (the shape of) the SACRUM. In addition, in classical alchemy a triangle with the point upwards represents the element FIRE.

So I was thinking about Lepus around the time of your post, and almost sent the star map also. Synchronicity is apparent and real, berserker lepus would approve.

Been drifting towards this view and incorporated some of the ideas, especially in the ancient tech section of /dgg/ #5. The mudflood and Tartaria are concepts I've entertained for years without going deep or committing on any opinion beyond the possibility of its existence. More recently came across a convincing collection of images and alternate history theories in the "The Lost Key" series, correlating with taking on a provisional belief, solidified in light of recent discoveries.

>Anyone heard of Tartaria, and the 'Mud Flood'? It wasn't Just a Flood. It was a frequency war.

>What we've been told was a natural disaster, a flood of water and dirt, is, in truth, a weaponised reset that used resonance technology to collapse an entire civilisation. This wasn't erosion over time, nor a series of isolated landslides or weather events. It was a global resonance event, engineered through ancient scalar technology, sound harmonics, and the hijacking of Earth's natural etheric grid.

Of interest was one image of a "Self-Luminous Buoy" from a Scientific American articles dated 1888, not a conventional gas discharge device, rather describing it's function as arising from circular agitation imparted by the the oceans waves on a mercury liquid in evacuated tubes. Electricity is generated by the friction of mercury with the sides of the self-exciting Geissler tube. Incorrectly presented as being undescribed by modern physics in The Lost Key, its actually an known effect of static electricity transformed into very high frequency AC.

What is interesting about it is it's relation to the "Nazi Bell", which was described as producing anomalous gravitational and time effects by high speed rotation of liquid red mercury in a high voltage plasma vortex, the vril machine, aligned with the theories of lost tech and the so called supernatural properties of this substance. These are described by fragments, or "splinters", found in old documents and images recovered by those investigating the Tartarian fall and coverup, many of which are displayed in the referred Lost Key series, definitively anomalous and not mistaken in this regard.

Another example of early high frequency electrical research relegated to the scrap heap, much like the bulk of Teslas work, obfuscated as it leads to the aether, and perhaps space.

Fourth Reich rises.

>In the early 20th century, secret societies in Germany (like the Vril Gesellschaft and the Thule Society) claimed to have made contact with entities from the House of Savoy/Alpine regions and beyond.

>The Black Sun (Schwarze Sonne): They believed Vril originated from the "Black Sun" the central singularity at the Earth's core.

>The Harvesting: They sought to build "Vril-Craft" (Bell-shaped craft/Die Glocke) which were essentially Mechanical Toruses. Instead of using combustion, they used rotating mercury or plasma to "bend" the local Vril field, allowing for "instantaneous" travel and antigravity.

>Before he was at NASA, von Braun was part of the Verein für Raumschiffahrt (Society for Space Travel), which was deeply entangled with the Vril Society.

>The Tech: This is the "Vril Energy" we discussed. Von Braun's early work on the V-2 rocket was the "conventional" byproduct of a much deeper, occult search for Antigravity/Toroidal propulsion.

>In the 1950s, von Braun partnered with Walt Disney to produce a series of films selling the "Space Age" to the public.

>The Spell: Disney is often linked to 33rd-degree Freemasonry and the "Black Nobility" social engineering projects.

>The Purpose: By using Disney's animation to "show" the public what space looked like, they engaged in Negative Netzach using imagination and desire to lock the public into a "Synthetic Reality." They gave the masses the fantasy of space travel while keeping the Vril technology for the Elite.

Several different Greek scholars, historians, and philosophers wrote about a legendary little human subspecies. In Aristotle's History of Animals (300 BC), he writes:

"these birds [the cranes] migrate from the steppes of Scythia [modern Eurasia] to the marshlands south of Egypt where the Nile has its source [Ethiopia]. And it is here, by the way, that they are said to fight with the pygmies; and the story is not fabulous, but there is in reality a race of dwarfish men, and the horses are little in proportion, and the men live in caves underground."

These mysterious cranes will come up again later.

"And as to the pygmies, he said that they lived underground, and that they lay on the other side of the Ganges and lived in the manner which is related by all. As to men that are shadow-footed or have long heads, and as to the other poetical fancies which the treatise of Scylax recounts about them, he said that they didn't live anywhere on the earth, and least of all in India." (Lucius Flavius Philostratus, third century AD)

>Philostratus also recorded an account of a myth about Hercules in which the demigod hero slayed a different demigod/giant warrior, and then fell asleep. But Hercules did not know that the pygmies were related to the giant he had defeated. And he didn't know they were watching and grieving from their underground realm. He goes on to detail how the pygmies lived underground in tunnels where they stored provisions, had little horses, and when Hercules fell asleep, they billowed forth from under the ground in waves and attempted to bind and capture him.

At the top of the image, there is text in a stylized font that reads "CODE MISTAKE" in yellow and "GROPE" in white, with "ARING ME" in smaller white letters below. The text is accompanied by a cautionary warning in red and black, which reads "CODE MISTAKE" in yellow and "GROPE" in white, with "ARING ME" in smaller white letters below. The overall style of the image suggests it may be from a video game or a digital art piece.

Australian abo's ate a race of midgets much like the Maori ate most of the Moriori, these fairy folk are easier to believe than Euro versions because the programming is less dense.

>According to tradition, these white Maori are descended from the pre-Maori populations, the Turehu or Patupaiarehe, supposedly a race of tall, fair-skinned, blue-eyed, red-haired fairy people that lived deep in the hills and forests

The last remnant tribe of the Aussie midgets disappeared into the Cairns rainforest in the 50's. Had a coffee table type rainforest book ages ago, got it secondhand somewhere, pictures of them and the story in there, midgets just decided fuck you guys one day and all left. Now if you look it up they say it's urban myth. Cannibalism of smalls goes against the narrative of our proud "original australians" who've been here 50,000 years and counting, keep increasing the number as they find new sacred sites, which is always just some random rocks as they lacked stacking skills.

When Lamech bore Noah they recognised him as one of the white haired elves, the Dragon Lords, those so depicted in myth and media to this very day.

"And after some days my son, Methuselah, took a wife for his son Lamech, and she became pregnant by him and bore him a son. And his body was as white as snow and as red as a rose; the hair of his head as white as wool and his demdema [long, curly hair] beautiful; and as for his eyes, when he opened them the whole house glowed like the sun... And his father, Lamech, was afraid of him and fled and went to Methuselah his father; and he said to him, "I have begotten a strange son. He is not like a human being, he looks like the children of the angels of heaven to me, his form is different and not like us... It does not seem to me that he is of me, but of angels."

"...“Draco” is Latin for “dragon” and derived from the Greek word draconia, originally described in antiquity as a serpent-like creature with wings. Furthermore, Draco derived from the original drakon, or draconta, which alternatively translates as “to watch” in the spirit of infamous seraphim watchers, the angels that bore wings. The angelic posterity, the Nephilim/Anunnaki were remembered in antiquity as watchers, rulers, and kings and all appeared like serpents/dragons.”

"In Hebrew, the word "saraph" means "burning" and is used twice in the Book of Numbers (21:6-8), once in the Book of Deuteronomy (8:15), and four times in the Book of Isaiah (6:2, 14:29, 30:6). It is usually used in its singular form as a noun to denote "serpent". The word "burning" was also used to represent a serpent, though there is no consensus as to why; it may be due to a snake's fiery colours or perhaps the burning sensation left by its venomous bite. Either way, in its plural form, "seraphim" occurs in both Numbers and Isaiah: Isaiah later uses the singular "saraph" to describe a "fiery flying serpent". This burning, venomous flying serpent described in Isaiah may be why we get the symbol of a fire-breathing dragon in European myths."

The image is a colorful illustration depicting three different styles of ancient Egyptian headdresses. The headdresses are labeled as "Upper Egypt," "Lower Egypt," and "Egypt Unifed." Each style is represented by a head of a person wearing the headdress, with the headdress itself being the central focus.

Starting from the left, the first style is labeled "Upper Egypt," and it features a white headdress with a pointed top and a red band around the top. The second style is labeled "Lower Egypt," and it has a red headdress with a pointed top and a white band around the top. The third style is labeled "Egypt Unifed," and it has a red headdress with a pointed top and a white band around the top.

The image also includes a caption that reads, "The crown of Lower Egypt was placed on top of Upper Egypt to make the double crown that King Menes wore." This caption provides context to the visual elements of the headdresses, indicating that the lower headdress was placed on top of the upper headdress to create a double crown, which was a common practice in ancient Egyptian royal regalia.

The style of the image is educational and informative, designed to illustrate the historical significance of the headdresses and their role in ancient Egyptian culture. The use of color and the clear labeling of the styles help to distinguish between the different types of headdresses.

The image displays a stone sculpture of a figure, which appears to be a representation of a historical figure, possibly an ancient Egyptian deity or a significant historical figure. The figure is depicted with a high, pointed hat, which is a common symbol of royalty or divinity in ancient Egyptian art. The hat is adorned with a small, ornate decoration at the top, adding to its regal appearance.

The figure's face is characterized by a stern expression, with a straight nose and a slightly open mouth, which suggests a sense of authority or solemnity. The eyes are wide open, and the mouth is slightly open, possibly indicating a moment of speech or action. The figure's hair is styled in a manner that suggests it is long and flowing, which is often associated with the hair of deities or important figures in ancient Egyptian art. The sculpture is set against a dark background, which contrasts with the light color of the stone, making the figure stand out prominently. The lighting in the image is even,

There are no visible texts or inscriptions on the sculpture, and the style of the image is a straightforward, high-resolution photograph that allows for a clear and detailed view of the sculpture. The image does not contain any other objects or elements, and the focus is solely on the sculpture itself. The overall composition of the image is straightforward and does not include any additional context or background elements.

Clearly these legends are where the reptilian ruler archetype originated, without getting into astral appearances, what features could have inspired the seraphims description of having a head like a serpent?

Noah being "white as snow and as red as a rose" is consistent with albinism, white skin and red eyes. Cains race, those who bore the serpents curse, had a similar aspect, the naga in the underworld.

"Cain the forefather of Lamech who was. . . [. . .] [marked] with [leprous whiteness] for God had said. . . [. . .] whomever slays Cain shall have vengeance visited upon their head sevenfold. As Abel's blood cried from the ground. . . [. . .] same [leprous whiteness] was made a sign that was visited upon all of Cain's [descendants] as it was their [. . .] inheritance for seven generations. With this [marked] inheritance, Cain's [descendants] sought to do all that was wicked on the land in the sight of the Lord, for they had been [marked] by Him. . . [. . .] For the [descendants] of Cain had received unto themselves [. . .] damnation which was the fair portion for Cain's sin."

Add this to the naturally dolichocephalic elongated skull of what they are sometimes calling "Homo Paracas", stretch out normal human features...

>Janku also identified a 'J' type of skull which has an enormous cranial vault ranging from 2600 ccm to 3200 ccm, and eye sockets which are about 15% larger than in modern populations.

>On websites such as Wikipedia they will claim elongated skulls are done by head-binding. And, this is true for most elongated skulls found. However, some of the skulls ~ most often ancient royalty, kings, princes & religious occult priests ~ cannot be explained by simple head-binding (like the example above). Many working in the field doing archeology and research with the strangeskulls (of both types) feel that the local cultures were trying to copy their "gods" and kings with these practices of head-binding.

Come! Let us carry Ellil,

The counsellor of gods, the warrior, from his dwelling.

Now, cry battle!

Let us mix fight with battle!

The gods listened to his speech,

Set fire to their tools,

Put aside their spades for fire,

Their loads for the fire-god,

They flared up. When they reached

The gate of warrior Ellil's dwelling,

It was night, the middle watch,

The house was surrounded, the god had not realized.

It was night, the middle watch,

Ekur was surrounded, Ellil had not realized.

Yet Kalkal was attentive, and had it closed,

He held the lock and watched [the gate].

Kalkal roused [Nusku].

They listened to the noise of [the Igigi].

Then Nusku roused his master,

The image is a digital illustration that depicts a fantastical scene. In the center, there is a large, winged creature with a human-like face, appearing to be in a state of distress or agony. The creature's wings are spread wide, and its body is covered in a mix of brown and white feathers. The creature's head is tilted downwards, and its eyes are wide open, suggesting a sense of panic or despair.

To the left of the creature, there is a smaller, smaller-winged creature with a human-like face, appearing to be flying away from the larger creature. The smaller creature is smaller in size and has a more delicate appearance, with a lighter color palette.

The background of the image is a cloudy sky with a mix of blue and white tones, giving the impression of a stormy or overcast day. The clouds are scattered across the sky, and the overall mood of the image is somber and dramatic.

There are no texts or discernible brands in the image. The style of the illustration is realistic with a touch of fantasy, and it is rendered in a realistic color palette. The image does not contain any other objects or figures, and the focus is solely on the two creatures and their interaction with each other.

Saying, "Every single one of us gods

Declared war.

We have put [a stop] to the digging.

The load is excessive, it is killing us,

Our work is too hard, the trouble too much,

So every single one of us gods

Has agreed to complain to Ellil! "

Ellil listened to that speech.

His tears flowed.

Ellil spoke guardedly (?),

Addressed the warrior Anu,

'Noble one, take a decree

Ea made his voice heard
And spoke to the gods his brothers,
'Why are we blaming them?
Their work was too hard, their trouble was too much.
Every day the earth (?) [resounded (?)].
The warning signal was loud enough, [we kept hearing the noise.]

Jews plagiarised and repurposed older Sumerian, Babylonian, and Egyptian sources. They made counter-narratives whereby good becomes evil and vice versa. As long as this is recognised and the reversal is corrected, good to go, it's what we do here.

"We still have arduous work to do to unify the Aryan/Indo-European currents with the purification of the cursed entanglement of the Saturnian cultists of the black stone. The reality is that within every myth there is a solar current and a chthonic one; we need to separate the wheat from the chaff and recover the solar myth."

>The extant texts of Enochic Judaism present accounts about the early history of humankind, which use the motifs familiar from the ancient Mesopotamian historiography. The different versions of the Jewish story of the Watchers originate as counter narratives about the antediluvian sages, orapkallus, which are known from the cuneiform literature. The myth of Adapa in Akkadian offers a version of the narrative in which the sage was promoted in heaven to a god-like status, which concept is corroborated with an entry in the cuneiform compendium Tintir and the Chronicle of the Esagila. This tradition also associated Adapa with the immortalized flood survivor. In the form of a counter narrative, the Enochic texts of Judaism attributed the heavenly assumption to Enoch and presented the Watchers as the demonic entities subordinated to him. The fall of the Watchers, the promotion of Enoch, and the primordial battle against evil forces are depicted in the Animal Apocalypse of 1 Enoch 85–90. A very similar scenario is found in the Chronicle of Esagila, which describes the early history of humankind from the Babylonian perspective. It can be demonstrated that the Animal Apocalypse uses this or a similar cuneiform historiographic source as the basis of its counter narrative.

The gods of old are archons or demons in disguise.

These are Aryan ancestral beings, they are no demons, not saying to worship them and mentioned that several times in previous threads. They are not the solar archetypes which came later and are archonic as you describe.

"If the builders of the Moon are evil, and the solar gods that came later are a deliberate confusion, who remains?"

The answer lies in what we call the "good instructors and aryan ancestors." They would be neither "lunar" nor "solar" in the later, corrupted sense of these terms. They would belong to a prior and superior order, perhaps associated with a pre-lunar and pre-material state of consciousness (the "Pelasgians" and "Proselenes" of legend).

Their symbol, therefore, would not be the Sun or the Moon of our current sky (which are pieces of the machine), but something like:

>The "Black Light" or "Black Sun" (a spiritual, non-physical sun).

>The "Polar Star" (a fixed axis outside the system of cycles).

>The "Void" or "The Source" prior to the creation of the material Matrix.

In the sky of this simulation, solar archetypes are presented as the "good" alternative to the "evil" lunar ones. But the true exit, according to the text's radical cosmology, lies in rejecting the entire artificial sky and seeking the origin that is prior and external to it."

Which would be this -

"There exists an absolute Foundation, unknowable in its own nature, which the doctrine names E (Essence). From this, there is no direct contact, for it infinitely transcends all form and all thought. However, by the inexorable law of participation, from it emanate the ε (Energies), vital and luminous flows that constitute the very substance of all that exists. These energies are the vehicle through which the Absolute makes itself present, in an attenuated and relative mode, within the domain of manifestation."
